But I do not plead for the white people of the South alone. In the ultimate conclusion of this issue we will take care of ourselves, and if we can not do it without help we will get in the North all the recruits who believe in white supremacy and white civilization that we want or need. Thank God, "blood is thicker than water." But we do not want to have to go through the fearful ordeal and crime of butchering the negro.

I realize that there are millions of good negroes, if they are let alone and not taught heresies and criminal thoughts and feelings and actions. I should like to see this good, easy, goodfor-nothing people given a chance to live. Give them justice; give them equal rights before the law; enable them to get property and keep it, and be protected in its enjoyment; give them life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, provided their happiness does not destroy mine.

The Senator from Wisconsin read the other day, with great pathos and effect, the eloquent speech of Henry Grady. is not a line or a sentence in that noble deliverance to which I The negroes whom Grady described were the do not subscribe. negroes of the old slave days—the negroes with whom he played in childhood, the negroes with whom I played in childhood, the negroes who knew they were inferior and who never presumed to assert equality. For these negroes there is throughout the South a universal feeling of respect and love. I have not got it here, but I have at my home in the city a photograph of one of these. I might term him "Old Black Joe," for he is a fullblooded negro, about 60 years old. He has been living with me thirty-five years. He now has the keys to my home in South Carolina. He has full charge and control over my stock, my plantation. He is in every way a shining example of what the negro can be and how he can get along with the white man peacefully and pleasantly and honorably, enjoying all of his liberties and rights. But he has never meddled with voting. He occupies the same attitude as the white man and the negro do in this District. They do not meddle with voting. I do not hesitate to say, however, that a more loyal friend no man ever had. Every child that I have would share his last crust with that negro to-morrow.

Grady spoke of the loyalty of the slaves during the war, and the Senator from Wisconsin amplified the picture in eloquent phrase. I myself, as a schoolboy of 13, saw the Confederate soldiers as they took their departure for the front to battle for home and liberty. I saw the parting between the husband and his family, kissing one after another of his chil-I saw the parting between the dren, saving the last kiss for the wife and mother, and then turning to the group of faithful slaves and shaking them by the hand, give the parting injunction, "Take care of your mistress and the children." How did the slaves redeem the promise? They all said "Yes, master." How they lived up to the promise There were in the South at that time 4,000,000 negroes, 800,000 males of adult age. The women and children of the white men who were in the Confederate army were left there, entirely helpless for support and protection, with these With 800,000 negro men, there is not of record a solitary instance of one white woman having been wronged until near the close of the war, when some of the negro soldiers who had been poisoned by contact with northern ideas come along and perpetrated some outrages.

The negro slave was true to the faith. When Sherman's army marched through South Carolina, leaving behind it a 40-mile breadth of burned houses, the chimneys marking where the habitations of the Confederate soldiers had been, house that had a plank on it gone, the women and children turned out in the rain and sleet of February to find shelter in the negro cabins, everything to eat burned or having been seized and carried off by the army, I knew some of these slaves to go behind in the track of the army and rake up the corn off the ground where the horses had been fed, wash it and dry it and carry it to the starving wives and children of the white men of the South.

Talk to me about hating these people! I do not do it. We took them as barbarians, fresh from Africa, the first generation we will say, or some of them twice removed, some of them once removed, some of them thrice removed, some of them a fourth removed from barbarism, but the bulk of them only twice. taught them that there was a God. We gave them what little knowledge of civilization they have to-day. We taught them to tell the truth. We taught them not to steal. We gave them those characteristics which differentiate the barbarian and savage from the civilized man.

Slavery died, and it ought to have died. The South was not responsible for it. It had been recognized in the Constitution. It had been guaranteed. The slaves had not been brought from Africa in southern ships. The barbarian was civilized by us. You struck the shackles off of him. What have you made of him? With all the Confederate soldiers gone to war, no woman was With all the white men in the South at home, every week some woman is offered up as a sacrifice to this African Minotaur. Senators will all recall the myth of the Minotaur, the monster which came from the sea and ravaged the lands of the Athenians. In order that the Athenians might get relief he made an agreement that if they would pay a tribute of ten young men and young maidens every year he would relieve them from this depredation. The Minotaur was killed by Theseus, but, before this happened, once a year ten maidens were sent to him to be devoured. The South to-day is offering up anywhere from 40 to 100 maidens and matrons to this modern beast that has been bred by fanaticism and political greed.

If the two races are to live together in the South, as no doubt they must, there is no earthly doubt that unless something is done to relieve the situation in the near future there will be direful tragedies. It is doubtful whether anything that we can do can undo the wrong that has been perpetrated already, whether the poison can be extracted without producing its re-We in our country exemplify as near as has ever been exemplified in history a condition depicted in the Bible. There is a phrase there very little understood. I never myself understood it until I made an investigation into Jewish antiquities:

Oh, who will deliver me from the body of this death?

What does it mean? It was the law of the Jews that for certain forms of homicide, certain black and bloody murders, the murderer should be stripped naked and his victim stripped naked and the dead man's body chained to the body of the living man, back to back, limb to limb, and the two left alone. The flies and the vermin which are produced and attracted by putre-faction brought about the inevitable result. The decaying carcass fastened to the living in the end produced death in the most horrible form.

In 1865 the South, prostrate and bleeding and helpless, a very Niobe of nations, had the dead carcass of slavery chained to it by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. For eight years two States labored under it. One after another the others had thrown off for a little while the incubus—not getting loose, but simply getting relief, being able to stand up, to move, to breathe, and to make some progress. But there the carcass hangs, riveted to our civilization. The putrefaction is going on. A return to barbarism is evident in every day of our contact with these people in the South. Relieved from police control, they are no longer compelled, as the Indians have been by the troops, to stay on their reservations. These negroes move where They have a little smattering of education. of them have white blood in their veins and taught that they are as good as the white man, they ask, Why not as good as a white woman? And when caste feeling and race pride and every instinct that influences and controls the white women makes them spurn the thought, rape follows. Murder and rape become a monomania. The negro becomes a fiend in human form.

We can not police those people to-day under the fourteenth amendment without taking from the whites their own liberties. In my desperation to seek some remedy to prevent rape and not have the necessity of avenging rape, I have gone so far as to plead with the people of the South to inaugurate a passport system, by which we should keep in control and under supervision all of the wandering classes, white and black.

Race hatred grows day by day. There is no man who is honest, going through the South and conversing with the white people and blacks, but will return and tell you this is true.

Some of the negroes have a good excuse. I will not dispute. If I were negro I would do probably as they do, but being a white man, I do just as I am doing, and I expect to do so, so help me God, as long as I have breath in my body.

Then I say to you of the North, who are the rulers of the land, who can change this or do something to relieve conditions, what are you going to do about it? Are you going to sit quiet? If nothing else will cause you to think, I notify you, what you already know, that there are a billion dollars or more of northern capital invested in the South in railroads, in mines, in forests, in farm lands, and self-interest, if nothing else, ought to make you set about hunting some remedy for this terrible situation.

As it is the South is helpless. We can do nothing. It is not worth while for us to propose anything. All we can do is to maintain our present attitude of resistance, to maintain our control of our State governments, and to submit to whatever you see fit to do in national affairs, because under no conditions do we ever hope that the South can regain control of this Government. We are one-third of the population. thirds. Every year your numbers are being added to by a million immigrants in the North, who stay there, while none go to us. The million who came in last year represent five Congressmen. Those who came in year before last represent five more Congressmen. There is no danger of political power ever drifting away from the North as long as it maintains their superiority in population. No one expects to see that in this day or generation.

Therefore we say to you—I take the responsibility, if I am alone, of saying to you—it is your duty to do something. It is your duty to move. It is your duty to begin the discussion.

For the time being the South is occupying an attitude of waiting. It is occupying an attitude of constant friction, race riot, butchery, murder of whites by blacks and blacks by whites, the inevitable, irrepressible conflict between a white civilization and a black barbarism.

I plead for the negro as much as for the white man. This body of death is chained to our backs by two constitutional amendments, and I ask you in God's name, I ask you in the name of civilization, I ask you in the name of the virtue and purity of the white women of the South, to do something to relieve us from the body of this death. [Applause in the galleries. 1

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not allowed under the rules of the Senate, and trusts that it will not be necessary to repeat this admonition.

During the delivery of Mr. TILLMAN's speech,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. TILLMAN's speech,

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, at this stage of the session I would not and ought not to be pardoned if I consumed much of the time of the Senate in reply to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I decline to be taunted or beguiled by the Senator from South Carolina into competition with him in the use of offensive epithets. The Senator was accurate when he said that we have served long together and have had sharp parliamentary contests. He will look in vain, unless my memory has departed, to find in all the Record any epithet applied by me to him or any assault upon his character as a man or a

The Senator says I have no right to set myself up as a mentor in the matter of manners in the Senate. I have not such a

I never have usurped any such a function.

Mr. President, I made no attack, using the word in its just, fair, and right sense, upon the Senator from South Carolina. We all have a better and a worse side. If it were not so, a man would be perfect, and there is no perfect man, Mr. President, in the world. When the better side of the Senator from South Carolina resumes its sway over his worse side and the anger incident to this debate shall have passed away, my estimate of him is that he will regret as he reads them in the RECORD some of the words which have fallen from his lips to-day.

Mr. President, the Senator imputes to me malice against him, and attributes my utterance the other day to not only malice, but a deliberate purpose to offend him. The Senator could not be more mistaken or more unjust. I have schooled myself, if I know myself, not to cherish malice, because I am not willing to so far surrender my happiness, my peace of mind, into the keeping of an enemy as to allow my heart to be corroded by the nursing and cherishing of hate.

If it were otherwise, I should have no malice against the Senator from South Carolina. He has never given me cause. And I will say here, if I may be permitted, that I think no member of this body has spoken here oftener or better of his ability and his real characteristics, and outside of this Chamber, than I

But, Mr. President, as an observation upon the personal part of the Senator's speech it is appropriate for me to say this, and upon no other hypothesis. I criticized the attitude and the ut-terances here and elsewhere of the Senator from South Carolina. That was within my right. I withdraw in no respect, nor do I qualify, the opinion which I expressed as to its injustice and danger of which the Senator from South Carolina complains.

If I, from this Chamber, should counsel the black men of the South to a course of revenge and violence; if I should utter words which, if they were of influence there, would spur the black men of the South to disregard the law; if I should say a word here or elsewhere, being a Senator of the United States, which would place obstacles in the pathway of the white people of the South and render it more difficult, Mr. President, for them to work out side by side with the colored race the destiny of each, there is not a Senator here from the South or from the North who would not feel it not only his right, but his duty, to criticise me. The Senator who can not tolerate criticism, if it be just, upon the sentiments which he utters in public as being other than a personal attack is unfortunate.

I was indignant over some of the utterances of the Senator from South Carolina. I was shocked, Mr. President, by some of the language uttered by the Senator from South Carolina in this debate and incorporated in the speech of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson]. I exercised the right of a Senator to criticize it, to deplore it, to express the wish that it had not been uttered, and my opinion that, uttered here and elsewhere, it is mischievous, as tending to lawlessness in the land.

If in later days and on reflection the Senator regards that as a just basis for the epithets which he has applied to me, and I know it, I shall feel then for the first time that I have not known the real Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. President, the Senator early in his speech characterized this entire battalion as a band of murderers and cutthroats. I do not give his language. Before he had proceeded far he characterized the regiment in the same way. I resented it as an injustice, which was entirely within my right. I did it, I thought, with courtesy, although I studied no word before I uttered it in that speech. I said, and I repeat as a proper rejoinder from an opposing side, that no man has a right to impeach the President of the United States, here or elsewhere, for injustice in discharging this battalion without a trial who advocates in public places the taking of human life without trial and judgment pursuant to law. Was that an insult to the Senator from South Carolina? If it was an insult to the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. President, the insult rested in repetition of language uttered by the Senator from South Cerolina, not in any word of mine.

Mr. President, the Senator has repeated the doctrine, which he announced, and for which he contended the other day. Not only that, the Senator has to-day gone far beyond any utterance of his of which I have ever heard or which I have ever read. This is the only time I have doubted his accuracy about himself. If any man in the United States had told me of the Senator and his attitude what he has said in the Senate this morning of himself I would not have believed it. I would not have withheld, Mr. President, for an instant my denunciation of it as unjust and untrue.

The Senator from South Carolina tells us that as governor of South Carolina, having taken the oath which a governor takes, to support the constitution, having assumed the responsibility, in the sight of God, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, he publicly announced that he would lead in putting to death without trial any black man who should commit the crime of rape upon a white or black woman, notwithstanding the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the State have guaranteed him—him and all others without regard to color or nativity, those born without our limits and the aliens dwelling among us—the protection of the judicial machinery which early in the history of civilization was devised to prevent one man, or a number of men, from becoming without trial the executioner of any human being.

As mankind has moved forward, Mr. President, on the lines of civilization, as Christianity has spread throughout the world, the lesson that all organized society is based upon law and an observance of law, and that without it there is anarchy and retrogression to the brutal days of tyranny-government without law is tyranny-people have come to realize how vital it is, not simply to the person involved, but to society at large, that all the safeguards thrown by constitutions and laws around human life must be everywhere observed.

Mr. President, this is no fanciful theory; it is the crux and heart of government. It is not only a law of man, but it is a law of God, and the only firm basis of organized society. forget it, to lapse from it, is to lapse into anarchy and barbarism.

Under the Constitution neither the State of South Carolina nor any other State can by valid act deprive a person of the full enjoyment of the guaranties of the Constitution; among others the right to know accurately with what offense he is charged; the right to a fair trial, by a jury, in court. The enactment of any such law is beyond the power of the State itself. Think of a doctrine that asserts the right, and justifies it, of citizens to trample upon constitutional provisions and constitutional right, to take life for any cause which may seem for the moment, in their anger and passion, sufficient. I am not speaking of the South. I am speaking of the country. I am speaking of all our people, North and South. Mr. President, it will not do. The doctrine would be fatal North or South, East or West, to order, to civilization; and the man who justifies it here or anywhere does a wrong to our system of government and to the civilization of the age. The advocacy of a doctrine which justifies citizens, at their will, in taking human life as punishment for an alleged offense without trial whenever passion moves to it, is revolutionary and wicked.

I said in the speech which the Senator criticises, and I repeat it, that "in the corrupted currents of this world "-I think I used that quotation—the passions of men will sometimes overcome their sense of duty and the obligations of good citizenship, and that here and there—it may be in every State—these guaranties will be forgotten, and mobs will take into their own hands the functions of accusation, judgment, and execution; but, Mr. President, such occasional barbarity is to be deplored. It is not, as I said the other day, in high places and by men clothed with power to be flaunted and advocated or justified. Is that a personal attack upon anyone? It is an utter disagreement with anyone who advocates lynching, who arrogates to himself to say in what cases the Constitution and the laws of the United States shall be abrogated, and as to what men. That is all.

Mr. President, in the remarks which the Senator made as to the Fifty-fifth or Fifty-sixth Congress he included me. If I ever knew it I had forgotten it, nor did I have it in my memory when I spoke.

When that happened-

Referring to what transpired in South Carolina, growing out, it was alleged, of the horrors and wickedness of carpetbag government, the Senator said-

When that happened we took the government away. We stuffed ballot boxes. We shot them. We are not ashamed of it. The Senator from Wisconsin would have done the same thing. I see it in his eye right now. He would have done it. With that system—force, tissue ballots, etc.—we got tired ourselves. So we called a constitutional convention and we eliminated, as I said, all of the colored people whom we could under the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments.

Mr. President, the Senator thinks I am incapable of realizing the situation and the conditions in the South. Probably I had not full appreciation of the conditions at the time to which the Senator from South Carolina referred; I probably have no adequate appreciation of the situation in the South to-day. I know that it is dangerous; I know that it is delicate. I know that the colored people of the South must and will remain in the South. I know it is a problem which taxes the ingenuity, the statesmanship, and the humanity of all the brain and all the heart of the white people of the South. The question which I had in my mind the other day was this: Which is the better spirit in which to work toward a solution of it—the sentiment and spirit of Grady or the sentiment and spirit of the Senator from South Carolina? Surely the question answers itself.

Mr. President, when one advocates lawlessness among the whites he of necessity encourages lawlessness and reprisal among the blacks. When one constantly vituperatively speaks of the superiority and inferiority of races dwelling side by side, he lights a torch; he lays the foundation for trouble.

Equality of the races I never have discussed, and I never will discuss it. It is bootless, Mr. President, and fruitless of anything but danger. It is enough to say that the races are different races. It is enough to say that undoubtedly the white race in the South will maintain the governments in the Southern States. We have not anywhere expected otherwise; but, Mr. President, leaving out politics, leaving out the ballot, before the law all men, without regard to color, must be equal. There can never be a day in this land, nor a spot, where the black man shall be less entitled than the white man to the guaranties which civilization has written into our Constitution and into the State constitutions. There is not a man so mean, so wicked, so homeless, so completely an outcast, that he is not entitled to the protection of the law; that he is not, before execution for an offense, entitled to his day in court, under the procedures which have been instituted, to have determined whether he is the man who did the deed. Does that attack anyone? That is a principle, Mr. President, which is at the very foundation of the Government. Without it this is not a Government either of liberty or of law.

The Senator, in a very feeling and eloquent way, spoke of the unspeakable crime sometimes committed by white men and black men, in the North as well as in the South, and pro-claimed that the best blood of the Anglo-Saxon race flows in the veins of the people of South Carolina-a question I do not discuss. He paid a tribute to the men who appreciate womanthe mother, the wife, the sister, the daughter. The Senator will not claim that appreciation of womanhood and the crown jewel of woman's existence, her chastity, is limited to any State in either quality or degree. The men of the North and of the South and the East and the West, aye, in the palace and in the cabin, equally love the home. They know it is the foundation, the ultimate basis, of society and all that is builded on it up to the highest form of government. No man living can more bitterly denounce than I feel the crime to which the Senator from South Carolina alluded. No man, Mr. President, in the world more desires its punishment than do I; and as I feel we all feel throughout the land.

The mother! Mr. President, in the Bible nothing could be found with which to compare the love of God for his children but the love of a mother for her child. It is a bond which crime. ingratitude, misfortune, nothing in the world can sunder. But, Mr. President, that is all apart from the question.

question is whether, wherever a man is charged with this fiendish crime, he has not a right, sacred as the ark of the covenant, to say in a court of justice, "I did not do it," and to have that question tried in due form of law. He has a right to the presumption of innocence which is thrown about every man accused of crime. He has a right to say, "You You must establish the offense and furnish evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that I am the man before you take my life on the scaffold." Now, Mr. President, who is warranted in trampling anywhere upon that principle, universal in its application, as strong in the military, and no stronger, than it is in the administration of law in the civil courts?

In my speech I referred to the Senator from South Carolina. as I have always done, as "my friend from South Carolina, but that is unwelcome to him now. The doctrine, not the man, did I attack. I stated—and I think it offended the Senator from South Carolina—that I did not believe his attitude upon the subject, violently asserted as it is here and has been before, and as it is elsewhere, represents the sentiment which pervades the white men of the South, the men charged there with government. I have some reasons for that belief.

It has remained for the Senator from South Carolina to be the only one from that section sitting in this Chamber since I have had to do with this Chamber who, as I remember, has given utterance to any such justification of trial by mob and execution by mob. There are many Senators here from the South, all, including the Senator from South Carolina, faithful in their desire and in their effort to legislate wisely for the people of the United States and sensitive as the Senator from South Carolina can be to the real interests of the South; men who fought on many a field of carnage, Mr. President, who bared their breasts to the sheeted flame of battle for the establishment of the Confederate government; strong men, able, pure, devoted, giving every thought and bending every effort here and elsewhere to work out this problem in the South. I have served here with Gen. Wade Hampton, as brave a man as ever lived, crowned by South Carolina with the honor which she has bestowed so many times in the past and doubtless will in the future bestow upon the Senator from South Carolina. He had knowledge of the conditions in the South. He looked ahead and realized the dangers. I never heard a word ut-tered on this floor by him of the black man in the South but words of kindness. I never heard from him on this floor one word in advocacy of dealing out one law to the black man and another to the white man in the South-one measure of justice to the black man and another measure of justice to the white man in the South.

One would have no better evidence that the Senator from South Carolina does not represent upon this subject the sentiment of the governing element in the southern States than is afforded by the silence of his associates on that side of the Chamber, with full knowledge of the conditions and of the danger and trouble which they involve. Through all the years of my service here every one of them and their predecessors have foreborn violent utterances upon the subject, and from the lips of no one of them within my memory have ever fallen in this Chamber insulting characterizations of the colored race, or any any advocacy, Mr. President, of lawless violence toward the race.

I have here other utterances of the same kind as those which have been made here by the Senator from South Carolina, to which I intended when I arose to call attention, but I pass them by.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me?
Mr. TELLER. No. I thought the Senator had concluded. If the Senator has finished his speech-

Mr. SPOONER. I am not quite through.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, a word in conclusion. I will not reargue the Brownsville question, and I will not go again into the race question, but I say again with all my heart from the standpoint of the North, whose sympathy the white people of the South need, and ought to have and will have, that any solution of this question, politics out of it, must be upon the basis of the black man's right under the Constitution to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and to the enjoyment of the guaranties of the Constitution which safeguard life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Now, once more repelling the imputation that any portion of the speech which has been criticized by the Senator from South Carolina was based upon personal ill will toward him, I yield the floor.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me Mr. CARMACK. for a short while?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee for a brief time, but not for very long.

[Mr. CARMACK addressed the Senate.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President-Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Sen

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TELLER. I will allow the Senator from South Carolina

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator is going to yield—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor. Does he yield?
Mr. TELLER. I refuse to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course—
Mr. TELLER. The Senator has had his day.
Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted an opportunity to give my friend from Tennessee a real explanation; but if the Senator from Colorado does not yield, I can not do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the doors of the Senate be now closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I second the demand.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The doors were thereupon closed; and at the expiration of one hour and forty-five minutes were reopened.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, when the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] moved that the Senate go into secret session some time back I had risen and asked that Senator to yield to me for a purpose.

Mr. TELLER. You did not state the purpose, though.
Mr. TILLMAN. I did not have a chance. The Senator from Colorado simply said, "No, no," and of course I had to yield to

tening to the naturally angry and bitter words of the Senator from Tennessee, that without the slightest purpose or intention or expectation of anything of the kind occurring I had very seriously wounded that Senater. Now, if there is any man on this side of the Chamber for whom I have more personal friendship and more admiration as a man and as a Senator than for the Senator from Tennessee, I do not know it. Our relations have been entirely pleasant from the time he came here. There has not been a hint or suspicion of friction or of anything other than the strongest, warmest friendship. Having discovered that that Senator was angry, and realizing that if he took seriously what I had read this morning he had a right to be, I was anxious to make an explanation and to let him understand that he was laboring under an error or misapprehension.

I now take occasion, Mr. President, to say what I wanted to say then, and that is that in so far as my first essay in the line of humor and wit has had such an unfortunate termination, inasmuch as I learn that others of my colleagues on both sides have felt that I had transgressed and had used words that they took to be offensive, I very much regret that I ever undertook to be funny. I believe I know how to be bitter, and I have a reputation of being able to use vitriolic language. Those characteristics of mine, which are my misfortune rather than my fault, have given me something of a notoriety along certain lines. But surely, having made such a dismal failure as a funny man at one end of the minstrel line, I will never do so any more.

Now, I want to say to one and all of the Senators whose names appeared in my maiden effort at humor that I intended no offense whatever. I had no idea or expectation of wounding any man in any way. Having wounded some of my friends—and all these men are my friends in a way—I shall most willingly and gladly keep out of my speech as it goes in the RECORD this humorous essay of mine

I think it is unfortunate that I was not allowed to make this explanation before the Senate had the matter under consideration in secret session. I would have done it then as willingly, and even more willingly, than I do it now, because my temperament is frank, blunt, and open. When I do not intend to hurt a man's feelings no man is more willing than I to say so, but when I do intend to hurt them I know how to do it; and if I had that intention I would not take it back and no one could make me take it back; that is all there is about it. Now, then, I want to apologize to every man here who feels aggrieved.

As far as the Senate itself is concerned, if I have caused its dignity to shiver and people to think that I have said things and done things which are undignified, I beg to apologize to the Senate, too. I am a kind of a rara avis, a farmer, without very much association with polite society. My manners are brusque and bluff and all that kind of thing. But I want to do the right thing if I know it, and the right thing is, when you have wounded a man and did not intend it, to tell him so, to apologize as far as you can; and if he will not take you for what you say, let him alone. That is just my attitude. I am sorry I wounded anybody. I did not intend to do so. That is all I can say.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina has spoken truly about the friendly relations that have existed between us in the past. He has spoken truly about our personal friendship. I will say, Mr. President, that it was because of that personal friendship in the past that I felt a keener resentment of what the Senator said.

No man is more ready than I am to accept a disclaimer of an intentional wrong, and there is no man from whom I accept it with more pleasure than from the Senator from South Carolina. The Senator had, among other things, taunted me with the fact that I had been defeated.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator thinks it was a taunt I did not intend it so.

Mr. CARMACK. I know it now. If it had been said by an enemy I should have treated it with utter contempt, but I must confess that it came with exceeding bitterness when it came from one whom I regarded as a trusted friend. I accept in all good faith the Senator's disclaimer of any intention to utter anything offensive. I regret very much that it occurred. I regret very much that I made any reply whatever to the Senator, understanding now his motives and his intentions, and I cheerfully withdraw anything I may have said.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the resolution may be now voted upon, if there is no other Senator who desires to speak.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not think we can vote on the resolution to-night. By the rule of the Senate it ought to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I was hoping—
Mr. TELLER. It is now past 6 o'clock. If it is necessary to object to voting on it to-night, I shall do it.

Mr. FORAKER. I supposed, under all the circumstances, there would be no objection to taking a vote at this time. the Senator prefers that it shall go over, we can vote on it tomorrow

Let it go over. Mr. TELLER.

Mr. FORAKER. Of course it will go over.
Mr. TELLER. Some of us have not yet had any chance to read it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President-

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that the resolution may go over as heretofore, to come up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow morning.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to suggest to the Senator that he name some hour to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that it may come up immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator does not name any hour to vote it. Would it be agreeable to do so?
Mr. FORAKER. I should like if we could fix an hour when on it.

we would vote on it, but I do not know how many Senators there are who desire to speak. Could the Senator from Colorado indicate when he would be willing that we might have a vote?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not have control of this I think that to-morrow morning I may want to talk ten minutes on the question. I do not care about going on to-

Mr. CARMACK. I can say to the Senator from Ohio that there are not more than fifteen or twenty who desire to speak.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it is well enough to have that information. I asked for a time at which we should vote because of the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia. I do not want to hurry it to a vote. It may be that there will be a great many of us who will want to speak before it comes to a vote. The Senator from Tennessee will not have a monopoly of the talking. I give him and everybody else notice to that effect. There will be no monopoly of the talking on the part of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—
Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, I said that purely as a matter of jest. I do not expect to occupy any further time.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, humor does not seem to be appreciated to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CARMACK. I will say that was my first attempt at humor, and will be my last. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, in the exercise of the high prerogative which belongs to the Senator who has business in charge, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 22, 1907, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.
Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the gentleman from Iowa is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Virginia twenty minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of several Members. ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Military Affairs may be printed in full in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection,

The report of the committee is as follows:

There was no objection.

The report of the committee is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has carefully considered the bill (H. R. 17347) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army, begs leave to report the same back to the House of Representatives with the recommendation that it do pass without amendment.

The laws governing the present organization of the artillery are included in the acts of March 2, 1899, February 2, 1901, March 2, 1901, March 2, 1901, March 2, 1903, and March 3, 1903.

The act of February 2, 1901, discontinued the regimental organization of the artillery and organized it into a corps, composed of two branches, the Coast Artillery and the Field Artillery—the Coast Artillery being defined as that portion charged with the care and use of fixed and movable elements of land and coast fortifications, including submarine mine and torpedo defenses (the latter elements being added by the act); the Field Artillery being defined as that portion accompanying an army in the field, including light artillery, fores artillery, siege artillery, mountain artillery, and machine-gun batteries.

For personnel the act provided that the Artillery Corps should consist of a chief, selected from among the colonels of artillery; 650 field and company officers in same relative proportion as for infantry and cavalry, and in numbers in each grade equivalent to those required for 13 regiments; 48 sergeants-major, 1 electrician-sergeant at each artillery post, 10 bands, 30 batteries of Field Artillery, and 126 companies of Coast Artillery. It provided that each battery of Field Artillery and each company of Coast Artillery should have the organization of the companies and batteries fixed by the act of March 2, 1890, The total commissioned strength of the artillery was fixed at 651 officers: the maximum enlisted strength, exclusive of electrician-sergeants, at 18,920 men. This law provided for 12 chaplains, and the act of March 2, 1901, provided 12 veterinarian portions as in the infantry and cavalry, and in numbers in each grade equivalent to those required for 14 regiments; of 2 additional chaplains; of 63 sergeants-major, 26 master electricians, and 148 electrician-sergeants (the number of sergeants-major being 15 more than now authorized, the master electricians 1 more, and the electrician-sergeants being divided into two classes and increased by 48 more than authorized by the act of March 2, 1903); of 42 master gunners, 60 engineers, and 60 firemen (new grades); of 14 bands, instead of 10, and of 170 companies, instead of 126 as now authorized, both the strength and the organization of the company being made variable so far as relates to duty sergeants, corporals, and privates.

For Field Artillery personnel the bill provides that it shall consist of 6 regiments, each regiment to consist of 6 batteries, organized into 2 battalions of 3 batteries each. The personnel provided for each regiment is that considered proper by the War Department for modern war conditions, and the enlisted strength and organization of each battery, as in the case of Coast Artillery companies, is made variable within certain limits at the discretion of the President.

The total commissioned strength of both the Coast and the Field Artillery authorized by present law is 663 officers, including 12 chaplains, and there are 12 veterinarians. By the proposed bill it is fixed at 967, an increase of 296 officers, excluding chaplains. The enlisted strength of the Coast and Field Artillery as now authorized.

For the Field Artillery, by the proposed bill the enlisted strength is fixed at 19,321, an increase of 5,043 over that now authorized.

For the Field Artillery personnel the enlisted strength is fixed by the proposed bill at 5,010 men, an increase of 998 over that at present authorized.

The proposed bill further provides for effecting the separation of the Coast and Field Artillery, how vacancies created by its passage authorized.

The proposed bill further provides for effecting the separation of the Coast and Field Artillery, how vacancies created by its passage shall be filled, fixes the pay of certain new grades of enlisted men, and finally provides extra pay for a certain number of Coast Artillery experts.

The four principal features of the bill, therefore, are: (1) Separation of the Coast and Field Artillery, (2) increase in the Coast Artillery, (3) increased pay for artillery experts, (4) regimental organization of the Field Artillery.

INCREASED PAY FOR ARTILLERY EXPERTS.

It was indicated above that the authorized strength of the Coast Artillery is 14.278. The actual strength, however, of this corps on October 15, 1906, was 11.218. The reason for this shortage is that it is impossible to get enlisted men for the Coast Artillery at the rates of pay now provided. There are certain duties connected with the Coast Artillery which require special training and skill. These duties are connected with electricity and machinery for coast defenses. After these duties have been learned the knowledge becomes of commercial value to the soldier, in that it fits him for positions in civil life which will pay him several times what is paid him by the Government. It has been found, therefore, that the Government after training these men, some of them in special schools, can not retain their services at the present rates of pay.

This bill provides increased compensation to 1,734 of these specially trained and valuable men while actually performing this high class of duty in which they are expert.

With respect to the cost of the proposed legislation it may be said: The number of electrician-sergeants is increased from 100 to 148. These 100 electrician-sergeants now draw $34 per month each, with allowances. The 148 provided for in this bill are divided into two classes, 74 of whom will draw $35 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, and 74 of whom will draw $45 per month each, with allowances, a Sixty engineers are provided for, at $780 per annum; total cost, $46,800.

Forty-two master gunners are provided for, at $408 each per annum; total cost, $17,136.

Sixty firemen are provided for, at $360 each per annum; total cost, $21,600.

In addition to the above grades created, the bill provides for a slight increase in pay for certain grades already in the service, as follows:

Pay Department: Pay, officersPay, men	$463, 830, 00 1, 221, 204, 00
TotalSubsistence Department:	1, 685, 034, 00
Rations Quartermaster Department:	437, 671. 00
Clothing, etc	378, 169, 00
Total annual cost	2, 500, 874, 00

Since the increase of officers is to be 20 per cent per year, the principal cost the first year, as far as officer's pay is concerned, would be simply due to promotion of certain grades and the addition of one-fifth of the officers at the bottom. The cost of this the first year would be $261,830, or about $200,000 less the final cost five years from now.

The cost indicated for the men is based upon an assumption that all the companies are full. The companies would certainly not be all filled up the first year, and it is safe to say that we may assume them as short during the first year, as the companies of Coast Artillery now are, i. e., a general shortage of about 25 per cent. This would reduce, therefore, the cost of enlisted men the first year for pay, rations, and clothing to about $1,427.785. This added to the $261,830 indicated above as the cost of additional officers for the first year would bring up the cost of this increase for Coast and Field Artillery to $1,689,615 as the cost for the first year.

EFFECT OF THE BILL UPON THE MAXIMUM STRENGTH OF THE REGULAR ARMY

In establishing a maximum strength for each branch of the line of the Army the act of February 2, 1901, provides in each case, "but the total number of enlisted men authorized for the whole Army shall not, at any time, be exceeded;" and section 36 of that act provides, "and the total enlisted force of the line of the Army, together with such native force (Philippine Scouts), shall not at any one time exceed one hundred thousand."

That is, a maximum is prescribed for each branch of the Army and a maximum prescribed for the whole. The sum of the separate maxima of the different arms is greater than the maximum of the whole; thus— Maximum for cavalry (section 2).

Maximum for artillery (section 6).

Maximum for infantry (section 10).

Maximum for engineers (section 11).

Maximum for native scouts (section 36). 18, 920 55, 080 2, 002

Total 106, 542 Maximum for line of Army, together with native scouts (section 36)

That is, the President can, by Executive order, maintain any branch at its maximum or can increase each a certain amount, but he can not maintain them all at their maximum strengths at the same time.
This bill, section 8, proposes to raise the maximum of the artillery, but to retain the maximum of the whole the same as it is, i. e., 100,000 men.

The maximum for the artillery would be increased 7,266 men, and the sum of the maximum for the separate branches would be increased to about 114,000 men. The increased maximum for the artillery will not necessarily be at the expense of either cavalry, infantry, engineers, or Philippine Scouts, but under the proposed law the President will not be able to raise all of the different branches to their maximum at the same time. This he can not do under the present law. Under the proposed law, and according to the necessities of the case, he may maintain the cavalry at its maximum, the infantry at its maximum, the artillery at such a figure that their respective maximum, and the artillery at such a figure that the total strength of the Army will not be a hundred thousand; or, he may maintain any of them at such numbers as the necessities may require, provided the total of them all is not more than 100,000.

It is now wholly discretionary with the President whether or not the different branches be maintained at their respective maximu. Under the new law this will be continued. He may, in his discretion, increase the Army to its maximum by cutting a little from the maximum of any one.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take but very few minutes unless some one asks a question. The bill has four Field Artillery. The artillery now consists of one corps, the Field and Coast Artillery constituting the corps. The one is a mobile force, serving with the line of the Army. The other is a fixed force and can not be transferred from one field of operation to another, having charge only of the coast fortifications, The necessity for the bill is apparent, I think, to every Member of Congress, as it is to the country at large. We have gone on year after year erecting costly fortifications for the defense of our seacoast until they have far outstripped the power of the Army to even care for the guns. Within the last few years there has been a transfer of another important work to the artillery, in the torpedo service from the Engineering Department. The torpedo service is now all placed under the control of the As at present organized there is not available any force whatever for the torpedo defense of the country. There was a time when I doubted the wisdom of separating the Coast and Field Artillery, believing that they would be better officered and efficient all in one corps, but the overwhelming sentiment of all the experts is in favor of the separation, on the ground that there is but little in common between the two branches of the artillery service. The Field Artillery serves with the cavalry and infantry in the field. There is an increase of about 990 men in this branch of the service, and they are now to be organized into six regiments. The war between Japan and Russia has enlarged the views of all military experts as to the organization of artillery. When men of my age were in the civil war there was no regimental artillery assembling on the fields. Batteries served with different regiments, and of course were assembled in large numbers at central points in all the great battles, but not as regiments. This gives a regimental organization in the artillery in the field, looked after by the brigadier-generals of the line, not the Chief of Artillery; puts them in the different posts under the direct control of the commanding officer of each post, but still preserves their organization. I think, in view of the information that was given the committee, it is probably a wise move to separate them, and it was unanimously agreed to do so by the committee.

Another one of the principal features is the increase in the Coast Artillery, that I have referred to, of a little over 5,000 men. The Field Artillery has a total increase of about 990 men. To my mind, however, the most important provision of the bill is the increased pay for certain noncommissioned officers, by which the Government will more likely retain the services of those men who have become experts in electrical appliances. To-day we give an electrician or sergeant of artillery $34 a month and allowances. This bill makes two classes of sergeants and gives to the second class $35 a month and to the first class $45 a month.

I think gentlemen will see that it is not an extravagant proposition, but it does hang up before these officers who now serve one term and then go out an inducement to stay in the service for this increased pay of $11 a month. We give 148 master electricians. The law now provides for 100. We made an increase only in the pay of the noncommissioned officers of the artillery. There is no increase of a single dollar to any commissioned officer or to any other officer than this noncommis-

Mr. GRAHAM. If the gentleman will permit, do you consider, in your judgment, that the increase made of privates in this service, 5,000, is sufficient to man the coast defenses of the country?

Mr. HULL. It is nearly six thousand. No; I will say, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be sufficient to man our batteries or in anyway near man our batteries in time of war, but it will be a relief in caring for them.

Mr. GRAHAM. Then, why do you not bring in a bill to carry sufficient number to relieve that want? What is your reason for not doing so?

Mr. HULL. I will explain as briefly as I can. It will make an increased force of skilled men and will make possible larger assignments for different batteries, who can look after them better, and provide for men remaining in the service of such high skill that the common men who do the ordinary work around the battery can readily be recruited and made available in time of war, but without this increased skilled force in time of peace in time of war it will be impossible to have enough skilled men to look after the guns, and they will be useless. This bill, to my mind, will provide a skilled force that takes time to train in sufficient numbers to care for the batteries to defend our coasts. The larger part of battery work is of ordinary labor that any ordinary recruit can be educated for in a short time, but the higher part of it, the caring for the gun, the providing for the aiming of the gun, and looking after the ma-chinery of the gun, requires high skill and knowledge of electrical appliances, and this bill will provide for that, leaving the country in a better shape by 100 per cent than it is to-day. course in time of war it will-be necessary for us to recruit large numbers of men to do the hard work of handling ammunition, of training the gun around from one place to another, but it can all be done by labor not especially skilled under the direction of a skilled man. And I want to say one thing further to the gentlemen of this House. While it is no province of the Military Committee, and in all probability I have no right to find objections, yet in my judgment, with the modern highpower gun that has wonderfully multiplied the resisting and destructive power of our coast defenses, the committee having charge of fortifications should at least look carefully into this question: Are we or not putting more guns at each place than necessary for the defense of the country? In other words, in my judgment ten guns to-day, with the high explosives, with the marvelous power, with the long ranges, are worth more than a hundred guns when this Endicott Board plan was formed; and if I had my way about it, I would try to reduce the number of guns at each place and make it just as effective.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HULL. Yes.
Mr. GRAFF. As I understand the plans have been changed in that regard. There are less guns assigned at different points than were under the Endicott plan. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was whether a raise of the pay of these noncommissioned officers would have any effect upon securing enlistments?

Mr. HULL. The general opinion is that it will have a very decided effect. But that can not be answered absolutely until it has been tried.

There was some testimony to that effect be-Mr. GRAFF.

fore the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HULL. All the department experts who appeared before us insisted it would have a material effect, and that as a matter of fact men now serve one enlistment of three years and become so proficient that they get such an increase from private parties, electrical companies, that they do not reenlist, and this increase, together with length of service pay that comes to all enlisted men, would cause reenlistments and enable them to retain nearly all the most valuable men. That was our testimony. This of itself would be of great value to the country.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If I understand the report correctly, we have now in the Coast and Field Artillery 18,290

We have not that many. It is authorized.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is intended to increase the Coast Artillery by 5,043 men?

Mr. HULL. Yes. Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Why will you need an additional force of 210 captains for 5,000 men?

Mr. HULL. We increase this by one regiment of Field Artillery. It makes for the same number of organizations and men exactly the same organization as now applies to the cavalry and infantry.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well; but if you increase the Field Artillery by a thousand men, that will make but 6,000 enlisted men, and why do you want 220 captains for 6,000 en-

Mr. HULL. Why, that is the total number authorized by the bill for all the artillery, both present law and increase. is not for the increase, but the total strength of the officers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then, how many captains is it proposed by this bill to create?

Mr. HULL. I can tell the gentleman in a minute right here. Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I want to learn something, if I can, about this organization.

Mr. HULL. I think we increase the captains by about sixty-

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. How many colonels are in the increase?

Mr. HULL. We increase the colonels altogether seven.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. How many men will a colonel command?

That is owing to how full his regiment is. In Mr. HULL. the Coast Artillery he commands a section of a country or so many geographical divisions, so many batteries, and in the Field Artillery he commands six companies of artillery, each of which may have 150 men. Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Of course my purpose is to secure information

Mr. HULL. I understand. I think it increases the first lieutenants about ninety to ninety-five, as I remember now, and the second lieutenants about the same. That includes the lieutenants outside of the line for staff duties.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. About how many officers and men are usually stationed at one of these points?

It is owing to the number of guns. down to only sixteen or seventeen men, and may run up to 700 men or even a greater number. The Coast Artillery is entirely subject to the demands of the service. They have no organization except batteries, and a captain's command may extend over a hundred miles or more up and down the coast. It is owing to the demands of the service. They are assigned under the order of the President, that order being necessarily brought out by the demands of the service as figured out by the coast fortifications and recommended by the War Department.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman inform me at how many points on the Atlantic seacoast these forts are located?

I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] Mr. HULL. can answer that. He is on the coast fortifications subcommit-But it runs from the highest northern part of Maine clear along the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast, every place where they have established seacoast fortifications.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that it is not likely that at any one time a colonel will have in command as many as a thousand or twelve hundred men-that is, directly in his command?

Mr. HULL. I would say in the Coast Artillery sometimes more than that and sometimes less than that. The colonel is not confined to one place in the Coast Artillery. He has a geographical part of the country to look over. Take it in New York, and there will be probably more than one colonel there; but take it up in some of the small places in Maine, and there will probably be no colonels at all. One place may have a lieutenant and no captain at all, and other places may have two or three captains. It is all owing to the demands of the service as laid out for the Government in the erection of the coast fortifications, and you can not have that organization in any other way on earth.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] permit a question.

Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does this bill provide for or contemplate regimental organization of the Coast Artillery?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.
Mr. HEPBURN. Why, then, is there any necessity for field officers, officers who will never have control of a regimental organization?

Mr. HULL. One reason, as I have just stated, is that they will have jurisdiction over a scope of country involving as many men as a regiment, involving as much duty as that of a colonel of a regiment, receiving reports from all that geographical division; and if they have no organization, they can not discharge the duty as an artillery organization would probably do. If you provide for no field officer, you would not have command by an officer of the line of Field Artillery, because they would stop at the grade of captain.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the reason and what is the necessity for a line officer of an organization where there never is to be a regimental organization, and where there would never be an assembly of that number of men that would at all approximate a regiment? Now, here is a provision for fourteen colonels and fourteen lieutenant-colonels and forty-two majors, men who will never command men at all. These men will be commanded, will they not, by the captains?

Mr. HULL. Under the supervision of superior officers, as much as if they had regimental organization.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the difficulty about these officers commanding these batteries reporting directly?

Mr. HULL. My time will expire in about a minute, and I can not go into the details, but about the same thing could have been said about the infantry at the beginning of the Spanish war; they had never been assembled as regiments since the civil

Mr. HEPBURN. The reason for that was that it was expected that when these men should go into the field they would be in a regimental organization, and there would be a large number of men assembled, but this does not contemplate the assembling of a number of men, and they will be effective, if effective, in a small number. But here you have provided a very large number of high-grade officers who will never have command of men, but who must and will simply be bureau officers for the purpose of receiving and transmitting papers.

Mr. HULL. These men would have the supervision of the organization within the geographical division, which would amount in some cases to more than the number of men who would be in a regimental organization. They would inspect the work, and if you have no organization the force would be noneffective and utterly useless and utterly impossible to carry into effect the purpose for which there is to be an organization.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him one further question. The gentleman stated that perhaps in one of these posts the usual number of men would not be more than sixteen. Will these sixteen men be under the command of a captain and two lieutenants?

Mr. HULL. Under the control of a lieutenant, unless it is a very important place.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What is the largest number of men that will likely be assigned to any one place?

Mr. HULL. New York would probably have two or three thousand men. The whole question is one that can not be gotten down to as to the number at every place, because the exigencies of the service would determine that entirely. It is impossible, I will state to the gentleman, to tell the exact number of men that would be needed at one place. The War Department has and can give that full information as to how it is to-day, but could not give it as it will be next year.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I, together with the other members of Mr. HAY. the minority of the committee, are in favor of this bill. It meets a necessity which has existed for a long time, and it is made the more necessary by the large amount which has been expended on our coast defenses. As I understand it, there have been expended in the last few years $119,000,000 for these coast defenses, and it is absolutely necessary, in order to keep them in proper condition, that there should be men to man these guns and take care of these coast defenses. This bill has been very carefully drawn and very thoroughly considered. If gentlemen will examine it, they will find that it does not increase the Army of the United States except as to officers. It provides for the better recruiting of the artillery service. The trouble has been in obtaining men for the artillery, owing to the fact that after they had been enlisted for a term of three years they are trained in certain branches of electricity and machinery and can command better prices in civil pursuits. This bill cures that defect by giving them higher pay. I hardly deem it necessary to consume the time of the House in advocating a measure which is so manifestly important and so absolutely necessary for the interests of the country. I yield ten minutes, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Texas. I do not see him, however, in the House, and reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has one minute.

Mr. HULL. I have no desire to consume it. Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slay-DEN] desires to address the House, but has gone to the commit-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill for the increase of the Artillery Corps, which chiefly provides for an increase of the Coast Artillery, is one that in the judgment of the committee has been made necessary by a series of appropriations covering a period of twenty-two years. During the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland, upon the recommendation of a board of officers appointed by Secretary Endicott, a general scheme of coast defense was inaugurated, which so commended itself to the judgment of the Congress and has so persistently met with the approval of the people that year by year liberal appropria-tions have been made for the development of the plan then adopted. As a partisan and as a Democrat I am proud of the fact that the scheme of coast defenses, then inaugurated on so large a scale, was inspired by a great Democrat. Mr. Samuel J. Tilden, who had the misfortune to be cheated out of the rights which he acquired by the suffrages of the people in 1876, retained his influence over the people, and about the time of the first inauguration of a Democratic President since the war, he wrote a letter to Mr. Carlisle, whom he knew would be chosen Speaker of the House, in which he recommended the system of coast defense which was shortly thereafter adopted. It is a remarkable instance of the influence of a private citizen, and it is worth noting that this letter from a citizen of the State of New York commanded more attention, and resulted in more legislation, and has had a greater and more continuous influence upon the policies of Congress, and upon the appropriations made in pursuance of that policy, than most of the messages sent by men actually filling the office of President, and we have had lots Steady and large appropriations have been made in furtherance of the plan, which has been modified only when inventions of a mechanical or electrical nature made it evident that it should be so modified.

Up to this time there has been spent in the development in the plan of coast defenses $126,000,000. If that plan is per-severed in and if Congress shall appropriate, as I have no doubt that Congress will appropriate, the money which will be required to complete it according to the recommendations of the experts, who consider and advise as to the development of the project, there will yet have to be spent $50,000,000 to bring it a state of completion. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary, if we persevere in our Asiatic folly, to spend many millions more. It will require the very large sum of $22,000,000 to complete the coast defenses for the Philippines and for the Isthmus of Panama. Furthermore, and gentlemen who vote for this bill ought to remember that fact and ought to vote for it with the perfect knowledge of it, it will require a still more important increase in the Artillery Corps, if we persevere in the scheme of undertaking to defend about 1,400 islands, which many military experts believe it is impossible for us to defend against any strong and aggressive foe.

This increase will make the authorized size of our Artillery Corps about 26,000 men. We now have authorized by law a little more than 19,000 men, but because of the inadequacy of pay to the men who can take into civil life the skill which is required in the management, care, and manipulation of heavy guns and get a greater reward there for that skill, few reinlist, and we have not yet been able to fill up this corps to the authorized legal limit. It will therefore be necessary, Speaker, if we intend to maintain the corps in a state of absolute efficiency, to increase the pay of these men until to some degree at least the pay given them plus the advantages of retirement, medical treatment, and other care given by the Gov-ernment to all of its soldiers will balance the rewards which they might receive for an exercise of a similar degree of skill in civil pursuits.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if we give all the personnel which military experts tell us will be necessary to man the guns which are erecting in these coast fortifications, we must have 55,000 men in the Artillery Corps of the United States Army alone. It is a far cry, Mr. Speaker, from the peaceful and economical position which we occupied prior to the war with Spain, when our entire Army consisted of about twenty-five or twenty-seven thousand men, to the present day, when we see in sight and nearly approaching a condition that will require more than twice that many men to equip adequately one branch of the military service. This bill does not provide, however, that there shall be an increase by law of the maximum limit to the size of the Army now fixed by statute. Indeed it expressly provides that it shall not be exceeded; but it will be necessary, of course, to still more skeletonize other branches of the military service, like the cavalry and the infantry.

When we shall have completed the scheme of coast defenses inaugurated twenty-two years ago we will give a desirable and necessary protection to nearly 6,000 miles of coast along the Pacific and Atlantic oceans. That project, I believe, meets with the hearty approval of all the American people. Certainly I can speak on behalf of a part of the people in the great State of Texas, and as their Representative I indorse the project.

We have on the coast of Texas one small city of about 35,000 people through which there was sent to the sea approximately $125,000,000 worth of farm produce within the last six months. The city of Galveston is second in the United States in the value of its exports, and to-day there is practically nothing to prevent even an insignificant foe from coming into that port and putting a stop to that business unless we can fend them off with a navy; and for the defense of a port two or three well-placed batteries are worth a fleet of ships.

This scheme is purely defensive. It will not excite the jeal-ousy or antagonism of our sister republics to the south, nor ought it to provoke the hostility and jealousy of any nation on earth. It is not like putting money into an overgrown navy for the purpose of sailing ships over the seas and engaging in inexcusable imperialistic ventures on the other side of the Pacific Ocean. Nor need these coast-defense projects excite the apprehension of any of the off-colored republics in the West Indies. Batteries which will adequately defend the great commercial centers of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Savannah, and Galveston will not put in peril a single custom-house in Santo Domingo.

The question is on suspending the rules. The SPEAKER. The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4563) to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any laws of Congress, to make a money contribution in connection with any election to any political office. It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator. Every corporation which shall make any contribution in violation of the foregoing provisions shall be subject to a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by the corporation in violation of the foregoing provisions shall upon conviction be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000 and not less than $250, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? Mr. RUCKER. I demand a second.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether or not the gentleman has any information to the effect that any order has been given by anybody to the Republican national executive committee to refund to the insurance companies the amount contributed by them to the late campaign?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was reserving the right to object until the question was answered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, under the guise of reserving the right to object, can not enter upon debate under this rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not debating; I was reserving the right to object until after the question was answered. usual, as the Chair well knows, and occurs every day.

Mr. MANN. I will object unless-

The SPEAKER. Under the operation of this rule, the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi were not in order.

It is not like the ordinary proceedings, where unanimous consent It is a motion to suspend all rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but the Chair had asked unanimous consent, which has been granted.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has not been granted. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to object?

Mr. MANN. I do not object, if they propose to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from West Virginia is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Missouri to twenty minutes.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill has vo provisions. The first will have the effect to make it unlawtwo provisions. ful for any national bank or any corporation authorized by any law of Congress to make a money contribution to any political campaign. That portion of the bill is limited in its effect to corporations authorized under the laws of the United States.

Unquestionably the Federal Government would have jurisdiction over its corporations and the right to enact, as this bill does propose to enact, that such corporations shall not make any contributions whatever to affect political elections. The second provision of the bill makes it unlawful for any corporation whether organized under the Federal Government or under the State-unlawful for any corporation of any character-to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature for a United States Senator. The bill will perhaps do some good, tending to remedy an evil which has been very much complained of in the country. In my own personal opinion no measure of Federal legislation will do much good toward preventing corruption at the polls and the corrupt use of money in connection with political elections until the Federal courts are given the power to indict and convict for those offenses. However, Mr. Speaker, the bill should do some good, and, in my opinion, can not by any possibility do any harm. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill. As stated by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], the bill contains two very simple propositions. First, it prohibits any corporation organized act of Congress, or any national bank, from making a money contribution to any political campaign. The second clause pro-First, it prohibits any corporation organized under an hibits corporations of any character from making money con-tributions to any political campaign fund to be used at any election at which Presidential or Vice-Presidential electors or Representatives in Congress are to be elected. This bill has passed the Senate. The House committee amended it so as to fix a minimum punishment and provide a jail sentence, in the discretion of the court. I take it that discussion of the bill is not required in view of the fact that it is of Democratic origin and strongly indorsed by the President of the United States in his annual message presented to this session of Congress. I understand, however, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] desires to be heard in opposition to the bill, and I therefore yield to him one minute, the time he asks, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of the passage of this bill for two reasons. First, I do not believe that the Government of the United States has the constitutional authority to regulate and control all of the elections in the country; and, second. I do not believe it ought to be the policy of the Government of the United States to provide that nobody but a rich man can run for office. This, properly labeled, would be labeled a bill to prevent a poor man from holding office in the United There is no more reason why a corporation should not contribute to political campaign funds than there is why an individual should not, and the same rule ought to be enforced against the individual as against the corporation. I can not see the consistency of providing that no corporation shall contribute to a campaign fund, while at the same time under various administrations of the Government individuals have been and will be rewarded, both here and abroad, for great cam-paign contributions, and that under the administrations of both political parties. Although I know of the popular demand of the country that we shall prevent the influence of corporations, and although doubtless that influence ought to be controlled, I shall have the courage of my convictions on this question as far as my vote is concerned.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, unless some Member of the House desires to address the House, I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I yield.

Mr. POWERS. I want to ask the gentleman how he construes that portion of the bill on page 2 in which it is stated that every officer or director of any corporation who shall consent to any contribution by a corporation in violation of the foregoing, etc., shall be punished?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I take it that that means to give his consent as a director, in his capacity as such director.

Mr. POWERS. It does not say consent by his vote.
Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. But it seems to me that the language is reasonably clear, and that is what it means.

Mr. POWERS. Would the gentleman understand it to include a man who might be an officer in a corporation and who did not enter a protest against it?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Certainly not. Consent is active. The mere failure to register a protest would not mean consent within the meaning of this act. I take it that the old statement that "silence gives consent" is not a legal declara-

Mr. POWERS. I know that in these days of wonderful reform we are all very eager to get something of this kind passed. So far as my observation has gone, I never knew one of these banks to contribute a dollar, or any other corporation, but I should not want to pass an act that would provide that if I happened to be a director of a bank I would be held criminally liable unless I entered a protest against what was doing, even though this is a time of great reform.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, one could just prior to each election send a certain protest to each corporation of which he was a director.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. How much time does the gentleman from Maine desire?

Mr. POWERS. I do not know that I care for any more. I apprehend that the House will pass the bill, and there is no use of my protesting against it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I have had no opportunity to investigate the constitutional features or the unconstitutional features of this bill, but I want to say that the political history of this Republic during the last few years has emphasized the necessity for some such legislation as is provided for in this measure.

It is a step in the right direction; but it does not go far enough. We ought to include all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and we ought also to provide an effective means for discovering violations of the law and for the enforcement of its provisions.

I would like to see this bill amended, if it were possible, so as to become retroactive and provide that both political parties should make an accounting to the people of the United States for the money which has been diverted and misappropriated during the last national campaign. [Applause.] I would like to see my friends of the other side of this Chamber come squarely up to the rack and say to the people of the United States that during the last Presidential campaign they took several hundred thousand dollars from the widows and orphans of this country whose ancestors had contributed in the way of premiums to insurance companies and misused them in illegitimate political expenditure, and that they are now willing to come up to the altar of repentance and not only do right in the future, but do right by paying back what has been taken from them wrongfully in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is an undisputed fact to-day that some of the great corporations of this country, in order to corrupt the electorates of this Republic, took from their treasuries in the last national campaign many thousands of dollars. It is a fact that the money had been contributed by men who had desired to provide a means of support and maintenance to their widows and orphans when their strong arms had been paralyzed by the power of death. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that evidence has disclosed indisputably to the satisfaction of this body that the money was improperly received and improperly expended, and now to-day in our desire to do right let us do the proper thing. Let the secretaries and the chairmen of our national committees make an accounting that will show where we got the money, from whom we received it, and how we expended it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Arkansas permit an interruption?

Cheerfully. Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman from Arkansas not believe that with his great power, influence, and popularity throughout this country one word from the President of the United States to the Republican national executive committee would cause them to refund to the widows and orphans the money of which the trustees of insurance companies robbed them during the last campaign? [Applause on the Democratic

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remain-

The SPEAKER. Thirteen minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped when I was interrupted by the reception of the message by the House that the message was from the President of the United States explaining all about this matter. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Mississippi I will say that it is a significant fact that the chairman of the last national Republican committee who received these funds has been promoted in office, but no accounting and no restitution has yet been made or been asked for. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is also a significant fact that while the President of this Republic is reputed through the press and by an interview from Mr. Drake, the commissioner of insurance in the District of Columbia, to have inserted his powerful hand into the legislation of the different States of this Republic to prevent the reduction of the salaries of insurance officers that he has not seen fit as yet to call up to his desk and administer the proper instructions to the next Secretary of the Treasury, the present Postmaster-General, the last chairman of the national Republican committee, who received and administered this fund. The same effort on his part would have restored this misappropriated fund. Let us be honest, Mr. Speaker. There is no man in this great assembly who does not know that during the last national campaign this fund was received and expended in the interests of a great political party. While we now brand as criminal that which has heretofore been done, we recognize the fact that the necessity of this legislation which is now posed grows out of conditions which existed and occurred during the last great national campaign. [Applause.] Let us then in our inspiration and endeavor to do right, while we pass this legislation, pay back what has been stolen. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to use his time now?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to discuss the question of the purity of the elections in the United States. is a great, big question, and far more important than the one that is directly involved here. I think it is fair to the national banks of this country to say that there are comparatively few of them that have ever made contributions to any election. They are interested in the prosperity of the country and in its success generally, and it would not hurt them, perhaps, in some cases to make small contributions, but I do not object to the bill so far as it relates to national banking associations. But we are all now on a virtuous footing. Substantially all of us, I think, are going to vote for this bill, although it has elements in it that suggest that it may be unconstitutional. The election of Members of the House of Representatives in the different States or in the general assemblies of the different States is pointed out as one of the cases where contributions are not to be made to aid in securing the election of anybody. How that comes within the purview of the Constitution I do not know. It is even doubtful about our right to prohibit corporations making contributions to control elections of the Members of this House. Under section 4 of Article I of the Constitution we find this provision:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or after such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The effect of this article and its construction is considered in Ex parte Seibold (100 U. S., 371, 382-385).

How are we by law to provide against contributions unless we have assumed to do that which we might do under the last clause of this section 4, to regulate the election of Representatives in different States. I only make this suggestion in the inc of having it understood that while I vote for the bill I do it with the mental reservation as to the constitutionality of it. We should be as ready to enforce the Constitution and all its plain provisions as we seem to be ready to attempt to attack something that is very vague or doubtful as to its general existence; but that will do for general talk on the rostrums over the country. We heard in the last campaign talk about a failure to pass a law to prohibit corrupt contributions at elections, but we did not hear very much about the principal things that in some sections of this country prevent the great majority of voters, white and black, from voting at all. I have recently read a very excellent paper delivered before a university in Athens, Ga., by a distinguished southern man by the name of Fieming, that tells us about these evils, and I wish that we had time to devote ourselves to the things that he discusses.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hardwick].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] referred to a gentleman from my own State, who was my predecessor in this body, and who delivered the speech to which he referred, but at the University of Georgia, not of Alabama. However, that is immaterial. We have not time, under suspension of the rules, to take up the questions suggested by him for discussion, but at some future day I hope to make some remarks on that subject.

On this bill I desire to say this only, that the bill is right, in my judgment, and ought to pass. It has been carefully con-sidered by your committee. It came from the Senate, where it was introduced by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, and passed without opposition. The President of the United States, the great leader of the Republican party, has himself recommended its passage in his message to this Congress. He says:

I again recommend the law prohibiting all corporations from contributing to the campaign expenses of any party. Such a bill has already passed one House of Congress. Let individuals contribute as they desire, but let us prohibit in an effective fashion all corporations from making contributions for any political purposes, directly or indi-

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to correct my statement. I said "Alabama;" I meant "Georgia," and I want to make that correction.

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly. I knew what the gentleman eant. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that this bill meant. under discussion is of doubtful constitutionality because it proposes to prohibit any corporation or corporations from making contributions in any election. Now, the bill does not propose that, but it does propose what it can rightfully propose, and that is, that any corporation chartered under an act of Congress shall not be allowed to make contributions to political We can regulate the terms under which corporations of that character can live and move and have their being. We might only have the right to regulate corporations along certain lines if they are not national corporations, but when they are chartered under national laws we have the right to regulate the way in which they shall exercise the charter power granted to them by this Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me one suggestion:
That this bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any corporation, without regard to banking associations?

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman has not read the bill care-I have the bill before me.

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not yield any more. The provision is, "It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for." Well, now, I will say Well, now, I will say that we clearly have the right to make laws applicable to the government of all corporations, so far as contributions to elections for electors for President and Vice-President and Members of Congress are concerned, and that is all that this bill provides as to that character of corporations.

But, Mr. Speaker, I arose not particularly to defend this bill, because it needs no defense from this side of the Chamber nor from that. Every honest man in this country is for it, and I doubt very much whether any Republican or Democrat can safely afford to face his constituency in opposition to it; but I do say this: That an effort ought to be made to get from the committee the bill to regulate the question of individual, as well as corporate, contributions and to provide for publicity of all contributions; and I am very much surprised that we have not given that subject proper consideration. The President himself, at the last session of Congress, recommended a measure of that kind, but he has virtually abandoned that position in this message. However, he has recommended the passage of this bill, and I assume that all my Republican friends will vote for it for that reason, and as it is based on good Democratic principles, the Democrats will support it. Therefore there principles, the Democrats will support it. ought not to be any trouble about its passage.

One thing further. The President has progressed a great deal since the last election. He was charged, in express terms, by the Democratic candidate with having received contributions from corporations, and with that charge was coupled the intimation that there were improper purposes in making these contributions, and there was, perhaps, an implied promise as to what these corporations should receive in return for these contributions. He denied it in one of the bitterest statements ever issued to the American public. He admitted in that statement that there were such contributions being made by corporations; but he denied absolutely that there was any improper motive or agreement, and he challenged Mr. Parker to prove it. It is a pretty easy thing to challenge proof about motives, because when you have to prove motive, the only way you can do it is by the facts and circumstances, just as fraud is shown, and that is always difficult to show, even when it exists, as I believe it did in this case.

In 1904 the President was not opposed to contributions by the corporations; at least he did not object to them. Now we have got him advanced a little further, because in this bill he has at least and at last objected to it, and said he was opposed to it, and if we keep on improving him we may make a pretty fair Democrat out of him, after all. [Applause and laughter on

Now, Mr. Speaker, only one other thing. Reference has been made here to-day to what happened on the subject of campaign contributions in the last national campaign. I want to read to you the statement of a man named Andrew Hamilton, who was the legislative agent, lobbyist, or what not-I do not care what you call him-of the New York Life Insurance Company; a statement, not about some election long past, but about the last national election, the one about which Parker and Roosevelt got into their row, and the one about which the President was so free with his falsehood charges. Not long ago, when these insurance frauds and contributions first leaked out, and were exposed to public view, Mr. Hamilton said this, among other

I had nothing to do with the payment in 1900 and 1904.

Speaking of the payments to the Republican campaign committee, he said:

In the last campaign some of the trustees-

Listen to this, now-

Some of the trustees insisted upon having the honor of making the payment. I made no protest, as I was glad to get rid of the responsibility. The 1904 contribution, amounting to $48,000, was paid to Mr. Bliss by G. W. Perkins, through J. P. Morgan & Co.

Now, I have seen it published in the papers as a boast and with all the pride and pomp of heraldry that the Republican party has a full treasury. I ask, as suggested by my friend from Mississippi and by my friend from Massachusetts and by my friend from Arkansas, why is it that with your overflowing coffers you do not give back to the widows and orphans this $48,000 that these trustees of the New York Life Insurance Company have admittedly and confessedly paid, without warrant or authority of law or of right, into your campaign fund? Why don't you do it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman know what the politics of Andrew Hamilton and John A. McCall were?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will permit me, I know that, no matter what Mr. Hamilton's professions are, he is a real Republican, in his conduct, at least.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman know that Mr. Hamilton was a judge, elected on the Democratic ticket, in the city of Mr. HARDWICK. Well, he never will be again. He has turned Republican, as evidenced by his practices.

Mr. SHERMAN. The fact is as stated, and it is also a fact that John A. McCall is a lifelong Democrat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the very fact that he has intended to establish by his question makes this condition all the more sad a commentary, because it shows that even Democrats, when identified with great corporations, are compelled to contribute Democratic money to Republican campaign funds in order to expect justice from a Republican Administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, they have got the country in such a condition that the rottenness goes outside of the Republican party and permeates everybody standing under the law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sherman] will pardon me, he holds a high position in the management of Republican party affairs. I want to know why it is that with full coffers, with your money that the papers brag about as being left over from the campaign of 1904, you do not give back to the New York Life Insurance Company the $48,000 that this man Hamilton swears was given to you without warrant or authority of law, which no man can claim was right? You ought certainly to return that if you have it to spare, as is boasted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, it is very delightful to witness the evidence of the approach of a sort of millennium of purity in the Democratic party. [Laughter.] I do not rise to discuss the merits or demerits of this bill. I shall vote for it. I want to suggest, however, as I shall not be here to point out the evidences later on, that no good will come of this legislation. It does not go far enough. If you want to purify the politics of this country by an assurance that there shall be no corrupting of the voters at the polls, you must go further than to suppress national corporations, and you must provide that no man shall contribute any money. The candidate shall not nor shall anyone else spend any money.

What is the necessity, what is the propriety, of picking out a corporation, which is an artificial person, which has not any conscience, is not capable of understanding the morals of the Democratic utterances that we have just heard, and forbid them to contribute to the corrupting of the populace of the country while you let the rich men put their money into the campaign?

Therefore you ought to go further and provide that no man shall be a candidate for office unless he can prove to a nonpartisan committee that he has not got a cent on God's earth and that he will not corrupt anybody. [Laughter.] You are making a long step in the direction of assembling in Congress a few years hence a club of millionaires and wealthy men, because if this operates successfully there is no possible reason why you should not forbid the contribution of individuals.

A corporation chartered under the laws of a State is just as much an individual as is a man, and Congress has just as much power over that individual, over all individuals, as it has over that corporation. Why not say that State corporations shall not earn more than a certain per cent upon their stock? Why stop? Why not legislate so that they shall not be able to contribute anything?

This is a step in the direction of the abolition of State lines and State rights that is the most startling of anything we have heard in Congress. You provide what shall be done and what shall not be done with the possible surplus and income of a cor-poration that is the individual of a State and over which Congress has no more power than it has over the rising and the setting of the sun.

But I did not rise solely for that purpose. This system of contributions to the national committees has been going on ever since we can remember. Why should you select the recent chairman of the Republican national committee to be attacked in the House of Representatives? What did he do more than any other man has done? I remember when one of the most efficient chairmen of the national committee of the Democratic party, and one who superintended some of the most unfortunate results, was a Senator of the United States, a gentleman of I never heard him criticised; I never heard high character. anybody try to find out how much money he got, although it was known that in the campaign of 1892 the campaign fund of the Democratic party was very large. He was a Senator. I never heard his relations to the Senate and the trust that was conferred upon him criticised. How does it happen that Mr. Cortelyou is assaulted here, and the fact that he is to be Secretary of the Treasury brought in here as re-flecting somehow, upon the passage of the bill and preventing the contribution and corruption of Presidential electors?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I point to that gentleman, as he has been assaulted on the floor of this House, as a demonstration of what conditions in America can produce. He is a young man that since I have been in Congress came here as a clerk, coming out of the custom-house in New York, where he had been a stenographer. He has made his way and has set an example to the young men of America that we ought to be proud of. [Applause.] In every position he has held he has won the praise of all fair-minded men. Every fair-minded man is proud of it. To-day he stands indorsed for the highest position, in many respects, in the Cabinet of this President that you are so fond of eulogizing, and whom we on this side also indorse and admire, by the united votes of the Republicans of the Senate and by the concurrent votes of the Democrats of the Senate.

So, if he has done wrong, you have condoned it. But he has not done wrong, and he stands to-day par excellence a citizen in the full light of American judgment and indorsed by the good sense of the people of the country.

So now, Mr. Speaker, as we go ambling along, wabbling along, to the destruction of the independence of the States in the management of their own corporations, wabbling along in the direction of undertaking to purify the franchise of the country without striking a blow in the real direction where corruption comes from, we may as well stop slandering the men of the country and stop the imputations that have been cast out here. I shall vote for the bill, and I shall do it simply, as very often it has been my duty, to help give the American people an opportunity to test the thing which, in my judgment, will be a total and significant failure. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missourl [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, if it is proposed to return campaign-fund contributions, I should like to make a suggestion on behalf of the people of Missouri. [Laughter.] Why does not the great reform governor of that State return to the poor policemen of the city of St. Louis the $28,000 that have been extorted from them for the purpose of electing the great reformer. [Applause on the Republican side.] This fact was ascertained by an official investigation of the Democratic senate at Jefferson City. At that time Mr. Vandiver was manager of the

Jefferson City. At that thise Mr. Vandiver was manager of the Democratic campaign committee, or of Mr. Folk's committee. Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. BARTHOLDT. Not now; I have only two minutes. That gentleman was a Member of Congress at the time. Congress had adjourned, and it would have been very easy for him to go to Jefferson City, whither he had been summoned, and testify, but at the time it suddenly occurred to him that he had very important business in the city of New York. He went to New York for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of testifying about how he collected his campaign funds. As I say, a part of that fund was exterted from the poor policemen of the city of St. Louis to the extent of $28,000. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this discussion, brief as it has been, has been sufficient to call the attention of the House to the difficulty of passing effective and practical legislation of this character. In the first place, the Federal Government can give no relief whatever, even if the public product of the control of the product of the pro lic sentiment of the country has grown to a point where the people will aid in the enforcement of laws of this kind, people will aid in the enforcement of laws of this kind, maless gentlemen are willing to concede planny points and males gentlemen are willing to concede heavy portains and conceded the propertion of the control of t unless gentlemen are willing to concede plenary power to the AGREEMENT BETWEEN NEW JERSEY AND DELAWARE.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4975) giving the consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the State of New Jersey and the State of Delaware respecting the territorial limits and jurisdiction of said States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely gives the consent of the Congress of the United States to an agreement entered into between the States of New Jersey and Delaware with reference to a question of boundary between those two States, a question having arisen between the States with reference to the boundary line and suit being brought in the Supreme Court of the United States on the part of the State of New Jersey as complainant against the State of Delaware as defendant. That suit is still pending. This agreement merely discloses that the two States have arrived at a settlement of the boundary question and agreed that the suit pending in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be discontinued. This bill protects the rights of the United States fully and completely. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and its passage is asked for by the legislatures and the executive officers of both States. I now yield, Mr. Speaker, ten minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Burton].

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to oppose the passage of this act. I have held it up for a purpose and simply desire to make a statement in order that my position may be understood. A suit has been pending in the United States courts for more than a quarter of a century to deter-mine the boundary question here involved. Two years ago the legislatures of New Jersey and Delaware passed acts agreeing to appoint commissioners to settle this boundary dispute. In article 4 of that agreement the two States were to appoint three commissioners whose duty it should be to draft uniform fish-Those commissioners have assembled from time to eries laws. time, but until the 16th of this month had not been able to agree upon the laws to be submitted to the legislatures for their passage. Up to the time when those commissioners should agree I have requested that the bill be held up in the Judiciary Committee, it having passed the Senate some time during the first session of this Congress. So far as I am individually concerned I was opposed to that method of settling the dispute. The rights and privileges of the Delaware River in the location involved either belong to the State of Delaware or they do not belong to it. This suit has been pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, where the question of jurisdiction and ownership should be settled. So far as I am concerned I have always opposed any compromise short of such a decision.

I admit that in all probability my opposition to a compromise is largely sentimental, because my maternal ancestor arrived on the shores of the Delaware River and landed on the west side in 1682 as a member of the party brought over to this country by that great and good man William Penn. From that day down to the present we have always regarded the 12-mile circle forming the northern boundary of our State as something sacred to the Delawareans. But the legislature of my State agreed to this compromise. As I say, where principle is at stake I do not believe in any compromise and think matters of this kind should only be settled by a court of competent jurisdiction; but in obedience to the sentiment expressed by the Delaware legislature I now withdraw any further opposition to the measure, more especially as commissioners appointed by the two States have agreed upon uniform laws to govern the fisheries situation. My judgment is that those laws should have been passed by the two States before this agreement was ratified by this Congress. However, a joint resolution brought in the legislature of my State asking Congress to delay the ratification of this agreement was laid upon the table by a decisive Therefore I yield to the command of the proper authority and withdraw further objection to this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

WOMAN AND CHILD WORKERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, to discharge the Committee on Labor from the further consideration of, and pass the bill S. 5469.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Labor from the further consideration of a Senate bill, and pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5469) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report upon the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States.

United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and report on the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical condition of woman and child workers in the United States wherever employed, with special reference to their age, hours of labor, term of employment, health, illiteracy, sanitary and other conditions surrounding their occupation, and the means employed for the protection of their health, person, and morals.

Sec. 2. And for the purpose of this act the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to utilize in so far as they may be adequate the forces of the Bureau of Labor and Bureau of Census.

Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. TAWNEY Mr. Speaker I demand a second

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Minnesota has twenty minutes Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, the only difference between the Senate bill, which I am asking the House to consider and pass at this time, and the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Labor and which is on the House Calendar, is that the bill we are now considering carries no apendar, is that the bill we are now considering carries no appropriation. It has been found expedient to leave the appropriation out for the reason that we do not know exactly how much the investigation will cost. To start the investigation the present force of the Department of Commerce and Labor might be sufficient; and if additional funds will be required, the Committee on Appropriations, upon the basis of this legislation can invest the recessory. lation, can insert the necessary item in an appropriation bill. As to the merits of this legislation there can be no doubt. civilized countries of the world have had investigations of this kind.

It is comparatively a new question, and in no country is it more important than in the United States, for the reason that proportionately more women are employed in the United States in industrial pursuits than in almost any other country on earth. We have never had a national investigation of this question. About twenty years ago the Bureau of Labor made a limited study of it, and then about five or six years after that the Industrial Commission took up this question, but merely touched upon it without going into details. The census reports, as you are all aware, merely give figures without going into the sociological aspect of the case whatsoever. The census figures, in other words, are merely statistical, while under this bill it is proposed to have a thorough investigation as to the effects of the employment of women and children upon their health and upon the social conditions of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time in order that may answer possible objections.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. BARTLETT. Where do you get the power to authorize the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make the investigation in manufacturing establishments or otherwise that employ women and children at labor in the States? In other words, where will you get the power to send the Secretary of Com-merce and Labor, or employees under him, into factories or stores not in the District of Columbia or in the Territories to make these investigations?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, my answer to that is that that power was no doubt conferred at the time when the Department of Commerce and Labor was created. Surely that Department has not been created for the sole purpose of looking into the affairs of the District of Columbia and the Territories.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; not at all. The Department of Commerce and Labor, if the gentleman will permit me to say so in his time, now investigates the business of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, but there is no such restriction or provision in this bill. Now, what authority has Congress to send the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, or Government employees under him, to Missouri or to Georgia, and to authorize him to say, "Open your factories, open your stores, send for your employees, and let me now investigate what you did with reference to these particular subjects that Congress has au-thorized me to make investigation of according to the bill?"

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not think that by an investigation the rights of anyone will be invaded or abridged. This bill merely aims at securing knowledge and information, and certainly that does not affect the rights of anyone. My friend no doubt has in mind the question of State rights, and believes that there are matters which are reserved to the States. We do not object to the States supplementing the information which the United States will gather on this subject. On the contrary, it will be highly desirable for them to do so. And, more than that, the labor boards and labor commissioners in the several States of the Union are all asking for this information, because only under national control can it be gathered in a proper way, or along the same lines, and viewed from the same standpoint, while if you leave it to the individual States you will not get the exact information you desire and upon which you can base proper legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Granting all that the gentleman says is true as to the requirement for the information, suppose a factory or a store that employs women and children refused to permit the representatives of the Department of Commerce and Labor to come in to make an investigation, what power or au-

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has not answered the question.

May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in the law that is compulsory about the attendance of witnesses, or anything of that kind?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no provision in the bill which Mr. BARTHOLDT. There is no provision in the bill which makes anything compulsory.

Mr. MANN. Nothing to compel the violation of legal rights?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the pending bill, and I hope it will pass without any material opposition. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the industrial, social, moral, educational, and physical conditions of women and children who are employed in shops, factories, mines, and other industrial establishments. The investigation will be one of incalculable value to the country and will no doubt result in the adoption of measures in the various States for the amelioration of the surroundings of women and children in the industries. Its influence will be educative, and it will doubtless attract the attention of the philanthropic sentiment of our people toward the improvement of industrial conditions all along the line. That women and children should be protected from the impositions and cruelties that are inflicted upon them by avaricious employers in some parts of the country is a question that will admit of no debate. The problem of child labor particularly is one of the vital social questions of the day, and it is engaging the thought

It is impracticable for the States, each acting for itself, to make an investigation along the lines proposed by the pending bill that will be of any considerable value. They would of necessity adopt different methods and standards for their investigations, and it would be exceedingly difficult, if not altogether impossible, to coordinate the results in such a fashion as to enable students of these problems to reach safe and intelligent con-While the Federal Government may not have the auclusions. thority to legislate for the States respecting conditions that are purely industrial and local, it may investigate conditions throughout the country and give them such publicity as will direct the public mind toward evils that imperatively demand cor-Public opinion is the most powerful remedial factor in rection. our civilization, and evils connected with the employment of women and children in gainful occupations will so excite public opinion and concentrate it upon such evils as to surely bring about wholesome and necessary remedies.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield additional time to the gentleman.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Government has never provided for a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the subjects mentioned in the bill. There have been special reports in relation to labor conditions in one part of the country and the other and special reports upon women and children in the industries, but they have not involved so broad a scope as that contemplated by this bill. They have not been so broad and comprehensive as the proposed investigation will be.

The investigation contemplated by the bill is of infinitely greater importance than a merely statistical and economic examination could possibly be. The Government spends millions of dollars every year for the investigation of economic and commercial questions. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are spent annually to promote better methods of agriculture, to improve stock raising and fruit growing, and several bureaus of the great Departments are engaged exclusively in studying the effects of insects upon stock, fruit, and farm products and in devising ways and means to extirpate them. If we have money to use in this fashion, it seems to me there ought to be no hesitancy in appropriating a sufficient amount of money to make a thorough investigation of the condition of women and children in factories, mines, shops, and mercantile institutions, with a view of surrounding them with the best and most wholesome conditions practicable. The glory of our country is not in its Army and Navy, nor in its great cities, nor in its magnificent in-dustrial institutions, nor in its stupendous aggregate of wealth, but in the freedom and the sturdy, self-reliant character of its citizenry. The very object of wealth, honor, culture, and government itself is to elevate the standard of manhood and womanhood.

I believe in any policy that will tend to secure equality of opportunity, industrial as well as political, to all the citizens of the land. I believe in any policy that will tend to promote in a legitimate way a more equitable distribution of the products of labor and capital. Those problems must be solved largely by the intelligence and the independence of our citizens, and it is of vital importance to the future of the country to so surround the children of the land that they be permitted to develop into strong, self-reliant, worthy citizens—citizens that may become helpful factors in the elevation of the race.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor of the House [Mr. Gardner of New Jersey] some time during the last session of the present Congress reported a bill from that committee, the first section of which was exactly like the first section of the pending bill. The second section of that bill contained some additional provisions, among others, an appropriation of $300,000 to carry the bill into execution. On the 16th of last April that gentleman moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution giving the bill a privileged status upon the Calendar of the House for the balance of that session. manded a second for the purpose of putting in the Record a statement furnished me by the Director of the Census respect-ing an investigation upon the subject of women and children in the industries which the Census Office had taken in connection with the general census of 1900 and the special census of manufactures in 1905. I announced at that time that I had no obfactures in 1905. jection to the bill being given a privileged status upon the Calendar, but I said that the Census Office had collected information and was then engaged in the preparation of a report upon that subject, and my impression at that time was that the Census Office report was substantially of the same character as that contemplated by the Gardner bill. In order that the Members of the House and the country might know exactly what the scope and character of the census report would be, I had the statement prepared by the chief of the division of review and results, furnished me by the Director of the Census, printed in the RECORD.

The resolution giving the bill a privileged status on the Calendar was adopted without opposition, but the bill never was called up for consideration afterwards and stands upon the Calendar to-day. It was not my purpose to oppose the bill, but believing then that the subject had better rest until the census report was issued, and if any supplemental investigation should be necessary it could then be authorized and thus save a possible duplication of work, I interposed to call attention of the House to the question. On subsequent investigation I discovered that while the report in preparation by the Census Office was more than statistical, that it involved more than the economic and industrial side of the question, yet it was not complete in that it did not include the sanitary, moral, and social conditions and surroundings of women and children employed in gainful occupations, and it was not general. It did not include all of the large industries of the country. I would have supported the Gardner bill in the last session of Congress if it had been brought up for consideration. I have been ready at all times to contribute by speech and vote what I could to secure a thorough investigation of this vital question. I believe in statistics of all kinds, and I believe them to be valuable for sociological and moral purposes as well as political and economic.

I am informed by the Director of the Census that two reports will be made upon the subject, one upon children employed in gainful occupations and the other upon women. The child report, I am informed, will be ready for the public within a week or ten days.

I will append at the end of my remarks, with the consent of the House, the statement which I had published in the RECORD on the 16th day of last April, showing the character and scope of the investigation by the Census Office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield a minute or two to me?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Are you against the proposition?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you suppose I would be against a measure that would do anything to help women to make a living? Never in this world, if I could legally help her. I ask for two minutes to make some inquiries of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, because I know he is a good lawyer and has given this subject a great deal of investigation. Suppose, after we pass this law, an agent of the Government should go down, say, to Nashville, and go out to the cotton fac-tory to investigate and the manager of that factory should shut the door in his face. Now, I want you to tell me, under the law as it will be if this bill is passed, how could Congress compel that door to be opened to show how many and how women and children are being worked in that factory-sometimes, possibly, wrongfully.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will be frank with the gentleman and state that I doubt the power of Congress to compel private institutions, located in the States, to submit to any such investigation. I think the Department would be obliged to conduct this investigation just as it does the investigation for the collection of statistics on cotton or any other industry.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose you apply it to cotton gins where there may be a number of women and children working, and Congress wants to investigate gins, and the owner

Mr. CRUMPACKER, Well, my judgment is Congress does not possess power to compel the manager or proprietor of such a factory to submit to any investigation. It is on the same basis as the cotton investigation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have asked these questions for the purpose of eliciting the propositions of law if I could on which the bill may be based. We have never had a chance to investigate it or to have the attention of the courts drawn to it, and hence they have never passed upon the question, because it is new legislation. Whenever we pass this law, are we not making laws that do not equip our agents with power, and ought we then, after we get only such information as these people are willing to give, to take a half a loaf and build a law on that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Congress has conferred or will by this bill confer all the power it has. If Congress specifically authorizes special agents to go into the factories and compel their submission to an examination, I believe it would transcend its power. But any establishment that would refuse to be investigated would be under suspicion, and no reputable industry

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The statement referred to by Mr. Crumpacker is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS, Washington, April 5, 1906.

The proposed report on the employment of women and children, according to the present plans, will embrace the following classes of data and the proposed report on the employment of women and children, according to the present plans, will embrace the following classes of data cach sex, 10 to 15 years of age, employed in each of the principal occupations for children. manufacturing industries can be derived from the material collected by the recent census of manufactures.

This data will show, first, the relative importance of men, women, and children among the wage-earners of each manufacturing industry as indicated by the average number of wage-earners of each class employed in that industry during the year. These data can be shown for each State and Territory and for each individual city, so far as may be deemed advisable.

Second, the earnings of women and children as compared with those of men in the same industry. In connection with the census of manufactures a transcript of the pay roll for the busiest week of the year 1904 was obtained from each manufacturer if available. On the basis of this transcript the men, women, and children employed in that week are separately classified according to the scale of their earnings, so as to show the number receiving under $3 per week; number receiving $3 to $4: $4 to $5, etc. Since this statement covers the busiest week in the year it is probable that most of the employees were working on full time, and that their earnings, therefore, will correspond closely to their wages or rates of pay.

The Bureau of the Census might, if thought best, collect data of a similar character showing the earnings of women and children in some of the more important mercantile pursuits not covered by the census of manufactures—for instance, in the department stores. This possibility is under consideration.

7. It may also be worth while to tabulate the number of children born to married women engaged in occusations for comperison with the part to married women engaged in occusations for comperison with the part to married women engaged in occusations for comperison with the part to married women engaged in occusations for comperison with the census of the constitutes.

7. It may also be worth while to tabulate the number of children born to married women engaged in occupations for comparison with the number born to other married women. The extent to which this tabulation should be carried would depend upon the results secured from number born to other married women. The extent to which this tabulation should be carried would depend upon the results secured from experimental work.

All the above tabulations will present new data—that is, data never before published. A part of the data will be derived from the population schedules of the census of 1900, and a part from the schedules of the census of manufacturers taken in 1905. The fact that five years have elapsed since the census of 1900 was taken does not, it is believed, impair the value of the data for the purposes of this report. Economic conditions have not changed so rapidly as that, and human nature has not changed at all. Moreover, it is important to have knowledge of the conditions in 1900 as a starting point from which to measure the future changes, whether in the nature of progress or of retrogression, which may be revealed by the census of 1910 or later censuses.

S. Besides these original sources of information, the statistics published in the main census report on occupations and in other census publications will be utilized so far as they can be made to contribute to the completeness of the discussion by further analysis or new correlations. An illustration of the possible value of work of this character is presented by the recent census bulletin on Negroes, the statistical data for which were derived almost exclusively from reports already published.

9. A study will be made of the census statistics of other countries with a view to introducing international comparison, so far as comparison, so far as comparison.

9. A study will be made of the census statistics of other countries with a view to introducing international comparison, so far as comparable statistics on this subject can be obtained.

It is hardly possible at this stage of progress to estimate very closely the size of the report. It is my expectation, however, that it will comprise between three and four hundred pages, making it about the size of the bulletin on Negroes.

Respectfully submitted.

I A HUL Chief of Division.

J. A. HILL, Chief of Division.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like about one minute more.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield the gentleman one minute of my time. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Under the census law, giving us the power to take the census every ten years, Congress may have the right to make these investigations, so that when the ten years come around we could have nearly all the information on this subject we require for a census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Any institution that would refuse to submit to such investigation would be under the suspicion of the entire country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that—
Mr. CRUMPACKER. All these institutions have voluntarily submitted to the investigation of the Federal agents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I dare say that is true, and no doubt it would be so, but still I do not want to make a law that in a certain sense blackmails a man into letting you in his front door when he has the legal right to shut his door and keep it

I am going to vote for the bill. I doubt its constitutionality. We need for many purposes the information these agents may secure in considering other legislation. The courts can settle the validity of the law.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill is, first, that under existing law the Department of Commerce, through the Bureau of Labor, has the power and the authority to make the investigation it authorizes. It can now make the investigation proposed without any additional authority. It is therefore unnecessary to duplicate this authority. The Bureau of Labor was established twenty-two years ago. It has for twentytwo years had the power and authority to make this investigation, but has never exercised it presumably because they did not deem it necessary. No estimate or request for an appropriation for this purpose was ever asked until a year ago, and it was not then included in the regular annual estimates. Not until the last session of Congress has it ever been proposed to make this investigation under the authority of the Labor Bureau. All propositions for that purpose have heretofore been submitted to and considered in connection with the Census Bureau, and investigations of this character have been made by that Bureau, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

This proposition therefore merely authorizes a duplication of the service now being performed by that Bureau.

I can therefore see no justification for authorizing two different bureaus of the same Department to make identically the same investigation, and for that reason alone this bill should not pass. I have here the act of 1884 creating the Bureau of Labor and defining the scope of its authority, its jurisdiction, and its powers. It is "to collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of labor of men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity." Now, if the purpose of this investigation is as claimed by those who are advocating it, there is ample authority to-day for making it, provided Congress will appropriate the money necessary

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Have you done that?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have not done it. We have not been asked to do it prior to this Congress.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Well, you are asked to do it now.

Mr. TAWNEY. We were asked to do it at the last session of this Congress. In proof of the fact that in the judgment of the Department they have authority to make this investigation under existing law, let me refer to the record. A supplemental estimate was submitted at the last session of Congress to defray the expenses of this investigation. This estimate was based upon the authority conferred upon the Bureau of Labor in the existing law. It was not favorably reported by the Committee on Appropriations to the House.

The appropriation was refused for the reason that the head of the Bureau of Labor could give no intelligent iden—could give the committee no information whatever as to what the ultimate cost of this investigation would be, or as to how long it would take to complete; and also because Congress possesses no power under the Constitution to correct by legislation any abuses or other unfavorable conditions surrounding the employment of women and children by private individuals or domestic corporations. In fact, the Commissioner of Labor, when before the committee, said that in view of the constantly changing conditions under which women are employed, it would require a constant investigation to keep abreast of the conditions surrounding their employment in this country, without which the information first obtained would be of no value.

Now, as I say, we have the authority to do this. We have the Bureau of the Census engaged in the performance of this service. Why is it necessary for us to duplicate that service? It is not, unless it is the purpose of Members of this House to add unnecessary expense to the Government for the sake of gratifying the wishes of a social organization the influence of whose members is sufficiently potential to overcome our judgment.

Mr. Speaker, this matter has not originated here. It does not come to us as a result of complaints regarding the conditions surrounding the employment of women in the various industries of the country. When Mr. Neill, the Commissioner of Labor, was before the Committee on Appropriations in the last session he was asked about the origin of this proposition, and I will read what he said in reply:

Mr. TAWNEY. How long has it been since the Bureau of Labor was

Mr. Tawner. How long has it been since the Bureau of Labor was established?

Mr. Neill. About twenty years.

Mr. Tawner. How long has it been since industrial enterprises have commenced the employment of female labor in this country to any great extent?

Mr. Neill. I do not know. The employment of women has been almost

Mr. Neill. I do not know. The employment of women has been almost—
Mr. Tawney. The employment of female labor was going on in this country before the Bureau of Labor was established?
Mr. Neill. Undoubtedly.
Mr. Tawney. How long ago was the idea of gathering these statistics first suggested?
Mr. Neill. I do not know that.
Mr. Tawney. Was any suggestion made prior to the last annual message of the Preddent of the United States?
Mr. Neill. I do not know that, Mr. Chairman. I know that for many years I have constantly heard from various sources an expression of regret that there was not more information available in that field.
Mr. Tawney. Do you know whether any request was made prior to this time for that purpose?
Mr. Neill. No. sir.
Mr. Tawney. There has not been, as a matter of fact?
Mr. Bulleson. I would like to know where this suggestion emanated? Whose suggestion was it?
Mr. Courts. It was submitted to Congress as a supplemental estimate in a special document.
Mr. Tawney. I shall just ask you if it is not a fact that the suggestion was made subsequent to the submission of the estimates of your Bureau? Did not this new document come in as a supplemental estimate, showing that it was an afterthought on the part of somebody?
Mr. Neill. No: it was not at all, Mr. Tawney.
Mr. Neill. No: it was not at all, Mr. Tawney.
Mr. Neill. I might give you the history of the matter as I know it.

Mr. NEILL. I might give you the history of the matter as I know it. Probably a month after I took up the matter of the administration of the Bureau of Labor I was written to by some ladies in Chicago and asked if our Bureau would not undertake an investigation of the conditions of working women in the United States. They had been interested in the subject for a number of years, and were anxious to have it done. I wrote back to them that it was a larger investigation than our Bureau could carry on with our scope and with our appropriation. A month or so later they came on to Washington and came to see me again, and asked if we could not possibly undertake that. I said it was a much larger investigation than we could attempt with the present force. They said, "Well, suppose we try to secure the passage of a bill directing that investigation. Could you undertake it then?" I said, "If Congress directs it and furnishes the means, we will undertake it," and there dropped the matter.

I believe they then went to see the President about the matter, and he agreed with them as to the importance of the investigation and recommended it in his message. I believe it was proposed at the time to introduce a special bill, and I gave no further attention to the matter, and said, when asked about it, that I had nothing to do with it. I said, "I do not want to be in the position of urging it along."

In the meantime a number of the women's clubs took the matter up, and shortly after the meeting of Congress several ladies came on here with the bill which they intended to have introduced. I am not sure, but I believe it was suggested to them that a bill was not at all necessary; that the Bureau of Labor already had the authority; it did not need further authority if an appropriation was available; and it was suggested to us, without having a special bill introduced—the suggestion was made to them to have an amount of that kind included in the appropriation measure. Then they came down to see the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor about the matter, and called attention to the fact of the recommendation by the President. I think they were told up here th

Now, as to the purpose of the investigation, so far as these worthy ladies are concerned, I have nothing to say. They are mistaken, however, in assuming that it is the business of the Federal Government to make the investigation beyond obtaining the information concerning the employment of female labor which the law now authorizes. They are advocating this measure not because of any special knowledge they have regarding conditions surrounding female laborers in any particular line of employment, but because of their desire to demonstrate to the country the power of their organization, which is the women's clubs, in matters concerning which they are able to concentrate their influence. I continue reading from the hearings:

Mr. BRICK. It is for the benefit of the race. They have no definite purpose. Mr. Neill. I think they expect to carry on a campaign in some of the States.

Mr. Livingston. Against the employment of female labor under certain conditions?

Mr. Neill. Probably. Not so much against the employment as against their being surrounded by certain conditions. I think their idea is that in many of the lines of employment men have taken care of themselves, through their organizations; men have insisted upon many changes for the protection of health and of life and limb. In many factories those things are provided by the proprietors where women work as well as men. I think their idea was to find out where women and children are working in factories without the safeguards for their protection which are provided in factories where men work, and if it were found that they were without such safeguards they would endeavor to secure legislation to remedy those conditions.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this investigation is to extend beyond the authority the Bureau of Labor now has, it will enter upon the authority the Bureau of Labor now has, it will enter upon a field of investigation which, as Mr. Neill says, these ladies propose beyond anything we have ever before undertaken. It must extend to all the conditions surrounding the employment of women and children in factories and all other lines of industry-the sanitary conditions, the safeguards to protect them against personal injury, the effect of their employment upon the home, upon matrimony, and every other phase of their Then, as these conditions are disclosed, they social existence. propose, where the report or result of the investigation justifies it, to come back to Congress and recommend legislation for the purpose of correcting and improving the conditions under which they are employed.

Mr. Speaker, if the Federal Government had the power under the Constitution to correct by legislation the evils these investigations may disclose respecting the conditions surrounding the employment of women, I would have no objection whatever to the investigation being made as proposed. In that case, however, I should want to know with some definite certainty the extent of the investigation and the probable time and amount of money necessary to complete it. The advocates of the measure admit that Congress has no power to impose any restrictions or limitations upon the employers of female or child labor where their employment is in industrial or in domestic service within the State. Legislative restriction of any kind respecting the employment of labor, whether male or female, adult or child labor, can be imposed only by the States. Why, then, I Why, then, I ask, should the Federal Government be compelled to embark upon an investigation the result of which it is powerless to deal with by either affirmative or negative legislation.

No matter what abuses the investigation may disclose, they can not be corrected or the condition of the laborer can not be ameliorated by Congressional enactment. It is the States alone that can act, and they would act if public sentiment was di-rected toward State legislatures instead of toward Congress. Mr. BARTLETT rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.
Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman unintentionally, perhaps, uses the words "child and female employees in the factories." That is not the sole intention of the bill, because it says wherever employed."

"wherever employed."

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it applies to female labor in whatever capacity employed—in the kitchen as well as in the factories.

Mr. BARTLETT. And in the stores.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to ask my friend whether he thinks the information gathered by the National Government on the subject we are discussing might not be of value to the States, which have the right and the authority to legislate on States, which have the right and the authority to legislate on the subject?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the information, if it is of any value at all, would be of value to the State in legislating upon this question; but, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask what right have the States to thus encroach upon the Federal Treasury for the purpose of having the Federal Government do that which belongs to the States and which they have reserved the right to do? Under what authority can we appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for the benefit of the States or for securing the information which is of benefit only to the States in so far as that information discloses irregularities or injurious conditions surrounding the employment of women, thus enabling the States to legislate or perform their duty to their own citizens upon information obtained by the General Government? What authority have we to appropriate money from the National Treasury for a purpose of that kind?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, the Government of the United States buys products from private industries, and possibly those produced by women; they do the stitching and sewing and so do some of the children, and possibly some of them may work in the Government factories or arsenals. Certainly we would have a right to investigate that. Can we not make an investigation based on the right that we have to take a census? That would give us a right to get information and get the facts. Of course we could not go down into the States and meddle with their matters. I agree with the gentleman in that. The States do not do enough for themselves in this matter.

Mr. TAWNEY. The authority for all the investigations the Government of the United States has any right to make exists to-day under the present law. If that authority is to be extended or if this bill extends that authority, as is claimed by the gentlemen who are advocating it, then we are embarking upon a field of investigation the boundaries of which no man can contemplate, the end of which no man can see, the cost of which no man knows-not even the Department itself-and the results of which the Federal Government is powerless to deal with by the enactment of corrective legislation. When before the committee in the last session of Congress the Bureau of Labor was asked what the probable expense would be, and the answer was that it would run up into the millions; that $200,000 would only provide for the beginning of the investigation. It would take a long series of years to complete it. The value of these statistics therefore would be far less, because of the magnitude of the investigation and the time consumed in making it.

Whereas every State in the Union can make this investigation as to employment of women within the State in a very short time, and those who are interested in it would then have the benefit of that information before the conditions surrounding the employment of women have changed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question on the subject of the power of the Federal Gov-ernment to make this investigation. I want to ask him if the Federal Government has not as much power to make this investigation as it has to investigate the cattle tick in Texas and Louisiana, the gypsy moth in Massachusetts, and the San Jose scale in California? Has not the Government as much power to make this investigation as it has to make any of the inves-tigations made now by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. TAWNEY. A distinction between the investigation here proposed and the investigation of the cattle tick is the difference between investigating an insect for the benefit of the general public and investigating conditions surrounding individual citizens of a State employed in a private institution. Mr. Speaker, I submit in the first place that the authority exists to-day for making all the investigation that is necessary or that they ostensibly want to determine sociological conditions or the physical conditions surrounding the employment of female labor, and that if we continue to encourage the doing of that by the Federal Government which belongs to the States to do there is no telling where we will end. We are confronted to-day with measures in this House which if enacted into law will merely authorize that which belongs to the States to do and which will require the expenditure of more than $150,000,000 from the Federal Treasury.

I could refer to a great many propositions that are now pending before this House involving the expenditure of large sums of money for the doing of that which does not involve any Federal governmental function whatever, and it is only a question of how far we are going and when we are going to attempt to check this tendency or cease to encourage States to unload upon the Federal Treasury the cost of doing things which the States themselves should do and would do were it not for the fact that in that case the cost must be paid by the State through direct taxation, whereas if the States can impose this cost upon the General Government the expense is borne out of the Federal Treasury, which is supplied with funds by indirect taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. Speaker, if the gen-Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. tleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] were correct in suppos-ing that the States could readily make this investigation at a low expense, I very much doubt whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McNary] and I would have introduced the resolutions on which this bill is founded. The fact is that all the State reports on this subject are inadequate and must necessarily be inadequate, for the reason that they are never prepared on the same basis. A minor means one thing in New York and quite another thing in South Carolina.

The question of child labor has been investigated to some extent by individual sociologists and by several States of the No investigation worthy of the name has ever been undertaken in order to determine the facts relative to woman labor.

The State of Massachusetts published the results of Doctor Sewall's investigations of child labor in 1904. We think highly of the treatise, although it only deals with thirteen of the States. After all, no individual and no State can extract reluctant testimony as well as the United States.

State statistics are most unsatisfactory. Often every boy and girl under 16 years of age is included, without further specification, in the list of "children." Such information is valueless as a basis for legislation.

To draw laws intelligently we must know whether the children employed are 10 years of age or 15 years of age, whether they are employed at night or during the school season, whether the surrounding conditions are sanitary, etc.

There is a vast difference of principle involved between the case of an ignorant girl of 11 working in a cotton mill during the school season and a strapping lad of 15 weeding onions in summer. Yet many State statistics make no distinction between these two classes of child workers.

The gentleman on the left asks what object is to be obtained by this investigation. He says that we have not the constitutional right to limit the hours of labor in any State of the Union, and he evidently believes that the statement of this fact ends the argument.

Now, I am not such a humbug as to pretend that I believe that the regulation of commerce clause of the Constitution gives us the right to regulate child labor. I know just as well as the gentleman that such power is reserved for the States by our instrument of Government. But the world moves, and the American people may change the Constitution, as they have done before.

Even if we have no power to legislate on the hours of labor in the factories of our States, we have nevertheless most distinctly and undoubtedly the power to legislate with regard to the hours of child labor in the District of Columbia and the Does the gentleman on the left think we can do so Territories.

Does the other gentleman there believe that model childlabor laws for the Territories and the District of Columbia would not be followed promptly by the enlightened States? Does he not know that the lead of the progressive States would promptly be followed by their neighbors, until even the most backward of our communities would feel the beneficent Purposely I have said nothing about woman labor, although exactly the same reasons exist for its investigation. As you know, the time allowed me is short and has even now expired. The gentleman who reported this bill will deal with that part of it which relates to women.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hunt].

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee having this bill under consideration, or a similar bill, which I would rather have seen reported than the present one, because it contains a limit upon the amount of money that might be expended in making this investigation, and in order not to take up the time of the House, and also in order that the good people who are interested in bringing this matter before the attention of Congress may be heard, I ask permission to have the Clerk read a brief argument which they have prepared and which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

The SPEAKER (interrupting the reading). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent that time be allowed the Clerk to read the argument for the benefit of Members of the House. It will only take a minute or two.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that time may be extended to read the argument for the benefit of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will extend the time on the other side correspondingly, in case it is desired, I have no objection.

Mr. HUNT. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed the reading will require about fifteen minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the article be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand that the good gentleman from Minnesota objected. He did not object.

The SPEAKER. But the other gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD, which is equivalent to an objection.

Am I to consider that the gentleman from Mis-Mr. HUNT. souri objects?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not object, Mr. Speaker, if the House is willing to listen to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand it will take fifteen minutes to Mr. HUNT. No; it will not; it will not take three minutes. Do you object?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The argument is as follows:

THE ARGUMENT.

The argument is as follows:

THE ARGUMENT.

The rapid increase in the gainful employment of women has given rise to many serious social questions, which are of national importance because they threaten the vigor of coming generations. Such problems as these can be dealt with properly only after a careful investigation of the conditions of the employment of women. The last census showed that more than 5,000,000 women were engaged in gainful occupations, and that their average wage was less than $270 a year, and that more than 50 per cent of them were not 24 years old. The census also stated that "the proportion of women employed in manufactures is increasing more rapidly than that of men." (Census of manufactures, vol. 9. CXNVI.) For such facts we can properly look to the census, but it is beyond the province of the census to show what the sanitary conditions of their employment are, their hours of labor, what the effect of this work is upon the morals of young girls, upon the health of women, upon their homes, upon their children, upon the wage-earning power of their husbands, upon family desertion, upon the birth rate and marriage rate, upon the industrial displacement of men by women. Moreover, while the census can properly show the number of women engaged in various industries, it can not show what work women are really doing, whether they are running heavy machinery or working side by side with men under improper conditions, whether men and women are getting equal pay for equal work. The census, for example, can show how many thousand women are employed in the cotton mills or packing houses, but it can not show what a single woman employed is really doing or earning.

Such an investigation is needed not merely to point out social facts and tendencies, but also as a basis for sane legislation in regard to women's work. Protective legislation for women has already been undertaken in many States on the ground that their presence in certain employments causes immorality or injuriously affects the leath of women women's work in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and since 1893 the labor department of the board of trade has published several additional reports on the employment of women and girls in England on women's work in the flax and jute mills, etc.

The inadequacy of the work of the census on this subject of the census data has been shown by Miss Breckinridge and Miss Abbott, of the University of Chicago, in a study published in the January number of the Journal of Political Economy. For example, it is pointed out with regard to the zewing trades that the census statistics show them to be a declining occupation for women, a more strikingly declining occupation for men, while the number of children employed has increased more than 100 per cent. The census does not and can not explain these changes. The census further shows that the number of men in dressmaking is increasing and the number of women decreasing, but again this is not explained.

In order to get at causes and conditions and results as well as mere numbers, it is asked that this work be done by the Bureau of Labor, whose work is investigation, rather than by the Census, whose work is enumeration.

However earnestly we may deplore the fact that women are in factories instead of homes, we must squarely face conditions as they exist. There are hundreds of thousands of helpless, untrained, unorganized women without the power of legislating for themselves, who are forced by stress of circumstances to earn their livelihood, and it is of vital importance that they be given the chance to be decently self-supporting under conditions which will not unfit them for wifehood and mother-hood and the care of homes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the argument of the gentleman from Minnesota, I desire to state briefly that if this investigation were asked when an appropriation bill is under discussion in the House an amendment to that effect would be subject to a point of order, because it would be new legislation, and for that reason we are here now asking this legislation, so that at the proper time an appropriation might be made for this purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have only two minutes left.
Mr. TAWNEY. I wanted to point out the fact that in authorizing the Bureau of Labor to have this investigation made you duplicate

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Now, as to the cost about which exaggerated statements have been made here, I wish to say that other and poorer countries than the United States have made such national investigation, and it seems to me that the United States can afford to make it. If it is left to the individual State, what does it mean? Each State will attempt to protect its own industries and we will have as a result one-sided and partial statements which do not convey the exact truth to the country, but if the investigation is undertaken und auspices of the National Government, which does n individualize between the States and will not discriminate a favor of one against the other industry in the several States, we can be sure of a fair and impartial investigation. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will pass the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is it necessary to have this investigation duplicated by the Bureau of Labor, which is identically the investigation the Census Bureau has made and has

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, in answer to that I will say that there is no duplication involved here. The Department of Labor has not made the investigation. The Census Office has not made the investigation. Here it is proposed merely by Congress to give directions to a bureau of the Government to make it, and surely every man who has given any attention to this subject knows how necessary and important it is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill does not require the Bureau of Labor to make an investigation. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to investigate, and he may utilize the Bureau of Labor or the Census Bureau or both of them.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. One more suggestion, Mr. Speaker. The Department of Agriculture is making investigations every day concerning bugs and insects. It seems to me that the life of a human being is about as important as an insect. [Applause.] And furthermore let me call attention to the fact that we are having investigations into the value and quality of coal and of building material all over the country. We are having investigations on the subject of cotton raising in the South; we are having investigations in all lines of industries, and why should not we ascertain whether women and children are employed un-der proper conditions in this country? [Applause.]

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LUCRETIA WILLIAMS.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Private Land Claims, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 15242) to confirm to the legal representatives of Lucretia Williams the title to 1 square league of land in Louisiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEN-NET] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments only be read, the original bill having been entirely stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendments in the nature of a substitute be read in lieu of the original bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15242) to confirm to the legal representatives of Lucretia Williams the title to one square league of land in Louisiana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the titles to all lands for which patents have heretofore been issued by the United States, and all lands for which bona fide homestead entries have heretofore been allowed, lying within that portion of township 6 north, range 13 west, which was segregated and surveyed under the order of the surveyor-general of Louisiana as the private land claim of Isaac Crow, assignee of Vincent Michele, embracing in whole or in part sections 9, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 33, and 34 of said township, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed.

SEC. 2. That the remaining portion of the land embraced within the limits described in the foregoing section upon which bona fide homestead entries have not been allowed prior to the approval of this act be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the heirs, assigns, or legal representatives of Lucretia Williams, and that all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the same be, and are hereby, granted and confirmed to the heirs, assigns, or legal representatives of the said Lucretia Williams.

SEC. 3. That the heirs, assigns, or legal representatives of Lucretia Williams shall have the right to enter upon any of the public lands of the United States, not mineral, and subject to homestead entry, a quantity of land equal in extent to that heretofore patented or entered under the laws of the United States within the sections described in the first section of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to confirm titles to certain lands in the State of Louisiana."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

No second was demanded; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

EXPATRIATION AND PROTECTION OF CITIZENS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 24122) in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad, with the amendments reported from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Per-KINS] moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24122) in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of State shall be authorized to issue passports to persons not citizens of the United States as follows: Where any person has made a declaration of intention to become such a citizen as provided by law and has resided in the United States for three years a passport may be issued to him entitling him to the protection of the Government in any foreign country: Provided, That such passport shall not be valid for more than six months and shall not be renewed, and that such passport shall not entitle the holder to the protection of this Government in the country of which he was a citizen prior to making such declaration of intention.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of State may issue, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, certificates of nativity to nativeborn American residents, setting forth the place and date of birth and place of permanent residence in the United States.

Sec. 3. That any American citizen shall be deemed to have expatriated himself when he has been naturalized in any foreign state in conformity with its laws, or when he has taken an oath of allegiance to any foreign state.

When any naturalized citizen shall have resided for five years continuously in a foreign state it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen: Provided, however, That such presumption may be overcome on the presentation of satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Department of State may prescribe: And provided also, That no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself when this country is at war.

Sec. 4. That any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an America relation.

SEC. 6. That a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent: Provided, That such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

SEC. 7. That all children born outside the limits of the United States who are citizens thereof in accordance with the provisions of section 1993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and who continue to reside outside the United States shall, in order to receive the protection of this Government, be required upon reaching the age of 18 years to record at an American consulate their intention to become residents and remain citizens of the United States and shall be further required to take the oath of allegiance to the United States upon attaining their majority.

SEC. 8. That duplicates of any evidence, registration, or other acts required by this act shall be filed with the Department of State for record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman the propriety of striking out the word "bill," in section 8, line 9, and inserting the word "act."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the amendment that the word "bill" be stricken out and that the word "act" be inserted.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Per-KINS] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bonynge] is entitled to twenty minutes

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second for the purpose of getting an explanation from the gentleman in regard to the bill and a comparison of this bill with the naturalization law that was passed at the last session. As I heard it read, I want to make one statement now before the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins] makes an explanation. I think that there are some provisions in this bill that conflict with the naturalization law that passed at the last session.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman will find that there are no provisions in this law that conflict with the naturalization laws. This bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs at the request of the Department of State, and in answer to a report made, which the gentleman may have seen, by a committee appointed by the Secretary of State to investigate and report upon certain evils which have arisen in the Department of State, chiefly in reference to the issue of passports and the protection exercised by this Government in favor of its citizens in other countries.

The first section meets an evil of this character. man comes to this country and files his naturalization papers. By that act he renounces his allegiance to the country from which he came, and therefore has no right to ask its protection. Under the present law the Department of State can not issue a passport, and therefore can grant no protection until the man has been fully naturalized—that is, until at the expiration of five years. Very many of these young men have occasion to go to other countries and many of them are sent to other countries by their employers as traveling agents, for which purpose they are often specially adapted. It results that until the five years have expired they must go, for instance, to a country like Asia and other eastern countries where a passport is required, without being able to have any protection from any country. meet that evil the Secretary of State is authorized-he is not directed-when a man has lived here three years after filing his naturalization papers, to issue a passport that shall be good for six months. I think there can be no objection to this provision.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman permit a question right at that point?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. RYAN. Suppose a man filed his application for papers, as you call it, and lived here ten or fifteen years afterwards without completing his citizenship, what would be done in his case?

Mr. PERKINS. He would be entitled to receive a temporary passport, good for six months, and not good in the country from which he originally came. The Government would extend no protection except that brief protection.

Other provisions, Mr. Speaker, cover this question. Under the law as it now is, because in large part this act is merely declaratory, a woman who marries a foreigner takes the citizenship of her husband. It is not infrequently the case that such a woman may desire to return to her American citizenship, alike for her own sake and for the sake of her children. The bill provides that where the marital relation has terminated-which may either be by the death of her husband or by absolute di-vorce—the woman shall have the right, either by returning to this country or by filing a declaration before proper officers, to retake her citizenship in the United States. I think the justice of that provision, Mr. Speaker, will be evident to the entire House; and we have extended a corresponding provision, as of | zens in their residence abroad.

course we should, to foreigners who take American citizenship by reason of marrying Americans.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer a question with reference to section 3?

Mr. PERKINS. I am coming to section 3 in a moment. The other provision, and the most important one in the bill, is sec tion 3, which was drawn at the request of the State Department to meet a very serious evil. We all desire that the full protection of the United States should be extended everywhere and at all times over every man who is a bona fide citizen of this land; but the protection of the flag is intended for those who intend to dwell under it. It should not be perverted to a fraudulent shield under which those who do not intend to share our lot seek to escape from the responsibilities they may be under to other governments. A large number of persons, larger than many Members of this House would suppose, come to this country; they become naturalized at the expiration of five years; they then return to their own country, to some other foreign country, without any intention of bearing their share in our lot, without any thought of returning to this land, with the intention of spending their entire days in a foreign land, but under the fraudulent protection of the United States. And, Mr. Speaker, when there is any question arising, when any one of these men who has come from Asia Minor, or no matter where else, is involved in any difficulty he shouts and shrieks for the protection of the American flag with more clamor than if his ancestors had fought and bled in every battle from the days of the Revolution down to this day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, we desire to exercise full protection, the State Department desires to exercise full protection, to every man who is really one of us, but this act puts into the statute what has been suggested by the courts frequently, a fixed, definite provision to prevent abuses. The act provides that where a naturalized citizen shall for five continuous years absent himself from this country, the presumption shall arise that he intends to renounce his citizenship. He may overcome that presumption if he can convince the proper officers that there is sufficient reason for his act, that he still intends to be one of us; that he intends to return here; that he is a citizen and expects to remain a citizen of the United States. But this bill provides that the presumption shall arise at the expiration of five years; and I think the same provision is in the naturalization bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. I want to ask the gentleman if he has considered in connection with section 3 section 15 of the naturalization law passed last session?

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that not only myself, but the committee which had the special investigation of this subject did consider it. But let me suggest to the gentleman that this bill is intended especially for the assistance of the State Department to save our Government becoming involved in any trouble or question with foreign countries where there is no just reason. The naturalization law provides that if a person resides abroad for five years proceedings may be had.

Mr. BONYGNE. That if within five years after the issuance of a certificate he goes abroad to remain permanently, that then the presumption arises that he did not bona fide make his application for naturalization, and provides for the cancellation of the certificate when issued under these circumstances.

Mr. PERKINS. Precisely.

Mr. BONYGNE (continuing). Which is a different proposi-tion to that contained in section 3 of your bill.

Mr. PERKINS. There are two reasons why this bill is required for the State Department. In the first place the provision of the naturalization bill merely authorizes the proceedings to be taken for the cancellation of the naturalization papers.

A man formerly living here goes to Asia Minor and becomes involved in some complication and calls upon this Government to send its war ships to protect him. There is no opportunity to have proceedings taken in court by which, after due notice to him, his naturalization may be canceled. But the Department can say, "For five years you have been absent from this country. Therefore, in the absence of evidence furnished by you, we shall presume that you have ceased to be a citizen, and we shall not extend to you the protection of the United States." Any legal rights, any rights of children, any rights of property, of course, still remain to be disposed of by the courts; but the State Department can say, "We decline to mingle in your contest, because there is a presumption that you have renounced the citizenship you obtained."

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether the motion is to pass the bill as amended?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes. Mr. LACEY. So that it does not affect American-born citi-

Mr. PERKINS. No; that was stricken out.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Suppose a case like this: An American-born woman marries abroad and subsequently separates from her husband and returns to this country. this bill she has forever forfeited her American citizenship, has she not?

Mr. PERKINS. No; but she has forfeited her American citizenship unless her husband dies.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But during his lifetime?

Mr. PERKINS. During his lifetime. That is not this bill; that is the present law. The courts have decided that a woman takes the citizenship of her husband, only the decisions of the courts provide no means by which she may retake the citizen-ship of her own country on the expiration of the marital rela-This bill contains nothing new in that respect, except a provision that when the marital relation is terminated the woman may then retake her former citizenship.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Then this is simply declaratory of existing law?

Mr. PERKINS. As to the first part, that she takes the citizenship of her husband, it is declaratory of existing law.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill now before the House, never having had an opportunity to examine the bill until this afternoon. It does seem to me, however, Mr. Speaker, that there is a very material conflict between the provisions of section 3 of the proposed bill and section 15 of the naturalization law passed in the last session of Congress. Section 3 of the bill now under con-sideration provides that when any naturalized citizen shall have resided for five years continuously in a foreign state it shall be presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen, and then it throws the burden upon him to establish that it was not his intention to give up his American citizenship. been held by the courts that the granting of naturalization by the courts is in effect a judgment. This provision of section 3, therefore, is to the effect that a judgment of a court, solemnly entered, shall be set aside upon a mere presumption, and it shall become the duty of the party in whose favor that judgment has been entered to establish by satisfactory evidence that the judgment ought not to be set aside.

Under the provisions of the bill passed at the last session it has been now provided that there shall be kept a record of every person in whose favor naturalization certificates are issued, and one of the main arguments in favor of that provision of the law was to guide the Department of State in just such cases as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins] has called to the attention of the committee. Under section 15 of the bili passed at the last session the party in whose favor the naturalization certificate has been issued is given an opportunity to be heard before the certificate is canceled. It raises the presumption, it is true, under section 15 of the law passed at the last session, that if he goes abroad within five years after the certificate has been issued to him, and goes abroad with the intention to remain there, that he had not bona fide made his application for naturalization.

But then the section gives him an opportunity, as I remember it, to be heard before that certificate is canceled. The bill as now presented does not give him that opportunity at all, but provides simply that if he has been abroad and has been living abroad permanently for five years, without any sort of proceedings being instituted, the American consul abroad shall have the right to say that this man has lived in a foreign country five years, and having lived there for five years cancel the judgment of the court issued in the United States upon the presumption that his certificate was issued illegally, and thereby throw the burden upon him to establish its legality.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. The provision contained in the naturalization bill passed at the last session of the present Congress for the cancellation of certificates for citizenship held by those who have been abroad for five years is predicated on the theory that the certificate was fraudulently obtained in the first place, and therefore there never was any naturalization in the sense of the law.

Mr. BONYNGE. I see that distinctly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the Constitution determines the question of citizenship, and after one has become a citizen by naturalization that status has attached; and I understand the judgment of some of the officers in the State Department is that Congress itself can not decitizenize him; he can only expatriate himself in a formal manner by renouncing his allegiance to this country and announcing his allegiance to some for-eign country or doing something irreconcilable with his status as a citizen. I think this section intends to enact into law the practice carried on in the State Department in relation to citizens in foreign countries, and that is to withhold from them-not decitizenize them, but to withhold from them—the ordinary protection of a citizen if they have become permanent residents abroad. I think it is a proper practice, and I think it ought to be enacted into law; but this section goes beyond that, because it says that one ceases to become an American citizen by simply residing abroad.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes; that he has ceased to be an American citizen.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He may abandon his citizenship simply by residing abroad.

Mr. MANN. Does that apply to anyone but a naturalized

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It only applies to naturalized citizens; but when one is naturalized he is a citizen as completely and thoroughly as if he were a native. The Constitution and laws of the country make no difference between native and naturalized citizens.

Mr. MANN. If this becomes a law, then, it does make a difference.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then it will conflict with the Constitution.

Mr. MANN. We are not talking about the authority to naturalize a person, but under what terms and by which he may lose his citizenship.

Mr. BONYNGE. Once he becomes a citizen, all the rights under the Constitution and the law attach to him as they do to a native-born citizen.

Mr. PERKINS. What difference of principle between this provision and that in the naturalization act, which says that if he goes abroad-

Mr. BONYNGE. And lives there permanently, it shall be presumed that his application was not made in good faith.

Mr. PERKINS. That does not apply to a man born in this

Mr. BONYNGE. No; but there are proceedings by which this naturalization certificate is set aside under the law passed at the last session, and he is given an opportunity to be heard in court, whereas under the provisions of the gentleman's bill as now presented he has no opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PERKINS. It merely raises a presumption as the result which the State Department would not exercise protection. If he had any legal rights, those would be disposed of in court before the State Department would be relieved from obligation of affording him protection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Fraud vitiates all proceedings, and the provision of the naturalization bill passed last winter was that one guilty of fraud in the proceeding was never legally a citizen of the United States.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, section 6 of the bill I do not know that I thoroughly understand. That section provides that a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization, or the resumption of American citizenship by the parents. In what respect does that change existing law, I will ask the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, that only changes existing law to meet the provision of this bill which gives to the woman who has married a foreigner, where the marriage relations have been terminated, the right to resume her citizenship. Under this act the children of such a woman would have the same right as the children of aliens to take American citizenship by coming to this country to reside permanently. Otherwise I do not think it changes the law.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have any serious objections to this bill except to section 3. I believe there is a conflict between the provisions of that section and section 15 of the law-a conflict at least in the proceeding by which the party is to be deprived of the benefits of the naturalization certificate. It is true, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] says, that section 15 of the law passed at the last session provides for cases instituted to set aside the certificate of naturalization, whereas section 3 of the present bill relates more especially to the benefits or the advantages that he acquires by virtue of his naturalization. I believe, however, that there ought to be some proceeding by which he could be deprived of those benefits and an opportunity to be heard exactly as is provided in the bill of the last session-that the proceeding ought to be instituted in court to set aside the certificate of naturalization. For that reason, while approving the other sections of the bill, I shall feel compelled to vote against it at this time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PERKINS. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. BONYNGE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bonynge] as to section I think it is too broad. In addition to the consideration that he urged upon the House, there is also the consideration of property rights and of property rights inhering in Americanborn citizens who might take through these foreign-born naturalized citizens. This bill will apply to a man who has now been abroad four years and eleven months, and if he remain abroad the other month he would be forced, under this statute, to become no longer a citizen of the United States, but a citizen of the country where he was.

Mr. PERKINS. Allow me to correct the gentleman. That

Mr. PERKINS. Allow me to correct the genteman. That certainly is not the result of the statute at all.
Mr. BENNET of New York. Why not?
Mr. PERKINS. The statute provides that, having remained there five years continuously, there shall be a presumption which, unless he satisfies the officers of the State Department, their consuls, or ministers to the contrary, would authorize the State Department to refuse to extend him protection. It can not affect any other rights, which of course he can present in court. No presumption is conclusive on a court. It is a mere presumption, but the presumption would protect the State De-That is the object of the bill and the result of the partment. bill and the only result of it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Here is the situation: A man lives abroad to-day. He lives abroad for four years and eleven month. He never hears of this act, and two days after the next month he dies, and it might be two or three years just as well, because the diffusion of the knowledge of the passage of this act will probably be slow. The only right this bill gives him is a personal right. His heirs can never prove that he had not ceased to be an American citizen, and yet you deprive his

American-born heirs

Mr. MANN. Not his American-born heirs. Mr. BENNET of New York. Why, yes.

Mr. MANN. Why, American-born heirs have their own citi-

Mr. BENNET of New York. Well, yes; but there is the question of taking through an alien. In our own State of New York there is a difference between land descending through a itizen and land descending through an alien.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman knows that even in our State that has been practically done away with.

Mr. BENNET of New York. My colleague will pardon me for disagreeing with him.

Mr. McNARY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BONYNGE. I yield so much time to the gentleman as he may desire of my remaining time.

I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. McNARY. As I understood him, he contended that this act would apply to a man who is now living abroad, who has lived there for four years and eleven months continuously. Does he wish the House to understand that that is his idea of the law, that it would work backward?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It would not have to work back-

Mr. McNARY. Why not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The man's term of residence has commenced abroad, but it concludes after the act. act says when any naturalized citizen shall have resided five years continuously in a foreign country it shall be presumed he is, etc., and therefore one month from the date of the passage of this act he will become in a condition where he "shall have" resided five years abroad and ceased to be a citizen, and you take away American citizenship from that large class of people who are abroad and know nothing of this and give them no chance. Further than that, it seems to me very doubtful whether a man once naturalized can have any more rights taken away from him than can be taken away from a native-born citizen, for citizenship is citizenship whether citizenship through being born here or having been naturalized here. I grant we had the power to pass what we did in the naturalization law, saying that a man must swear when he makes his declaration of intention and petition that he intends to reside here permanently, and then, if within five years he went abroad and remained abroad, that was presumptive evidence that his initial oath was perjury, and the courts could declare after notice that he never had become a citizen. There is decision after decision with which my colleague from New York is unquestionably familiar, that we can make no distinction between the rights and privileges granted a native-born citizen and a naturalized citizen, and I think, with all due respect, that he has made section 3 too broad. The rest of the bill, I think, is all right, but section 3 has too much to it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. Speaker, I will only take a few minutes'

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield? Mr. PERKINS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the objec-Mr. McNARY. tions to this bill are rather finical. As a matter of fact, it does not lay down a hard and fast rule. It only does what the gentlemen who are on the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization did themselves last year in the bill they reported, raise the presumptive question whether or not a man had forfeited his citizenship, and that presumption is in the cognizance of the State Department. Now, as a matter of fact, the committee does not consider that this bill is a retroactive bill, or it is apparent that the State Department would not so apply the bill to those who are now living abroad; that it would only apply the bill to those men who would hereafter take up their residence abroad. The bill has been very carefully considered. I do not think it conflicts in any degree at all injuriously with the provisions of the naturalization bill of last year, and I do not feel the objections brought against it are of great weight, At least they have not convinced me, and I would have been perfectly willing for my part, as a member of the committee, to an amendment bringing this bill into entire harmony with the bill of last year if it were necessary, but I do not feel that the bill conflicts in any way with the provisions of that bill. It is a fact, as shown to the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, that a bill of this character is necessary, in view of what has taken place in the countries of the Orient and in view of the troubles our State Department has had, particularly in the case of certain naturalized citizens who, after receiving their citizenship papers here, have gone to those countries, remained there, and have caused our State Department and this country much needless embarrassment. I believe the bill is proper, and with proper reasoning and common sense on the part of our State Department, it will work well, and I think it should be passed.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second for the purpose of bringing out a discussion on those two particular sections of the bill, sections 3 and 6. I am not satisfied myself that section 3 does not conflict with the naturalization laws. and I shall therefore have to vote against the bill. I do not desire to take up any further time in argument. If some gentleman on the floor desires me to yield him time, I shall be glad

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would like two or three minutes. Mr. BONYNGE. I will yield such part of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] as he may desire.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to

I want to support it, for I believe in its purfavor this bill. The practice of the State Department is, as I understand it, to extend the protection that goes along with a citizen abroad and that is implied by an American passport. The practice is to extend that protection to all citizens except those who have gone abroad and have taken up permanent domicile, who have practically left this country permanently, and to that class of citizens only passport rights and protection are withheld. It does not deprive them of the rights of citizenship at home, the right of inheritance under our law. It recognizes those rights and, of course, would of necessity, because the State Department would not have the right to deprive a citizen of those rights, the property rights of citizenship at home. It simply withholds from them the protection that is usually accorded citizens in foreign countries. Now, this section provides that if one who has been naturalized goes abroad and remains for five years, it shall be presumed that he ceases to be an American What does that mean? He is no longer a citizen. It involves all of his rights. It involves the right of protection while he is abroad; it involves the rights he may have acquired under the property and inheritance laws of the United States here at home. It decitizenizes him, while the policy of the State Department does not do that excepting in so far as it relates to the protection of citizens while they are in foreign countries, and still leaves to them all of the rights as citizens that the property and inheritance laws of this country and various States of this country may confer upon them.

The criticism that I have of this section is that it does take away from this class of citizens the individual rights that pertain to citizenship in this country. I believe that the practice of the State Department ought to be enacted into law, and if section 3 could be so reframed as to provide that with men who have gone abroad, native as well as naturalized, who have lived abroad five years, at least, showing no evidence of returning, the State Department is not required to afford the usual protection of citizens.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Sterling). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I re-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes.

Mr. PERKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Lowden].

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct what seems to me a misapprehension as to existing law. Under the law as it is enforced now there are other methods of surrendering citizenship besides swearing allegiance to some other country. decisions are numerous that either a native-born American or a naturalized alien may by his own act voluntarily surrender his American citizenship. The decisions are numerous that a native-born American who goes abroad with the intention to abide there permanently does lose his citizenship in America without any other act whatever. It has also been held in numerous decisions that a foreign-born citizen who leaves this country after an absence of a number of years will be pre-sumed to have abandoned his citizenship. No distinction is made between the American-born citizen and the foreign-born citizen beyond this, that a presumption has been indulged in in the case of the foreign-born citizen that he intends to remain away permanently. And whenever that fact is made clear with reference to either a native-born American or a naturalized American, he has forfeited under the laws his right to American citizenship and therefore the protection of the United States. And this section 3, as a matter of fact and law, is only declaratory of the unwritten law, making it a little more definite as to the exact time when the presumption attaches.

Why, I remember to have read that it was very warm around the Capitol here almost a hundred years ago because we urged the right of any man of any country to expatriate himself if he wanted to, and that has been the recognized law of this country ever since.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to just one feature of the law of citizenship of our sister Republic across the Rio Grande. If a man buys a piece of land or a piece of real estate it is necessary for him to say in the deed that he does not desire to be a Mexican citi-The mere fact of recording the deed otherwise makes him a citizen of Mexico. I would like to ask my friend how far we would recognize that peculiar state of the Mexican law?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not go so far. In the remaining minute I wish to say that I entirely agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this law is substantially declaratory, except it does distinctly state the terms under which any man, for the purposes of protection, may make claim on this country.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to ask the gentleman whether in his opinion section 3 would apply to a man whose five years expired on yesterday?

Mr. PERKINS. No law is presumed to be retroactive.
Mr. OLMSTED. Would it be sufficiently retroactive as to apply to four years and ten months, or two months after the passage of this act?

Mr. PERKINS. The general provision is, and no one knows better than the gentleman, that no laws are presumed to be retroactive in the absence of express provision in the bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. I think there is a pretty serious question as to that in the way in which this bill is drawn.

The question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 89, noes 10. So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTOMAC RIVER AT SHEPHERDSTOWN, W. VA.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24111, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24111) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Norfolk and Western Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized, in the improvement and relocation of its line, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River, at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va., where the Potomac River forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Maryland, as the said company may deem suitable for the passage of its road over the said river, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge authorized by this act be commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1, in lines 10, 11, and 12, strike out the following: "As the said company may deem suitable for the passage of its road er the said river."

Strike out sections 2 and 4 and change section 3 to section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Pearre, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECALL OF BILLS FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 21, 1907.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return the bill (S. 3671), entitled "An act granting a pension to Louis Castinette."

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), that the President be requested to return the bill (S. 5073) entitled An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. Smith."

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District appropriation

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Mann in the chair.
The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24103, the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, there was one clause which had been adopted by the subcommittee, but which by accident was not printed as a part of the bill, and in order that that may be adopted as an amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the committee return to page 29, line 22, to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman to have his amendment sent to the desk and have it read, so that we will know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves the right to object, and the amendment will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, at the end of line 22, insert: "Provided further, That no street railway company shall use the bridge herein authorized by its tracks until such company shall have paid to the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to one-sixth of the total cost of said bridge, one half thereof to be credited to the United States and the other half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether this right has been granted or whether it is a limitation upon a power already granted?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know that the general power has not already been granted. This is a new bridge across the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, and at present the street railway company's track terminates at that crossing. When this bridge is built, so that there will be no grade crossing, the street railway company will undoubtedly wish to extend its tracks across the We are told on investigation that if it is to be used for bridge. that purpose the expense would be increased 16g per cent by reason of the additional width and strength necessary in order to enable the street railway to go over, and we thought it was no more than fair that if they do so that they should pay a sixth part of the expense.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this a highway bridge or a railroad bridge?

Mr. GILLETT. It is a highway bridge over a railroad.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will that interfere in any way with the travel of vehicles going over?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no; but it is always true that where a highway bridge is put across a railway the street railways may This bridge, in order to allow them to do so, would have to be built wider and stronger, and therefore we say it is but fair that they should pay a part of the expense.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does this provide that on the building of the bridge they shall be allowed to go across on condition that they pay this?

Mr. GILLETT. We do not say they shall be allowed to go That question will have to be settled hereafter. neross will have to apply to the proper authorities and be granted the right. This simply makes provision that if they are permitted to go across they must pay that portion of the cost of the bridge which we thought was caused by them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the question whether the street-railway companies shall hereafter be allowed to cross the bridge is not determined now?

Mr. GILLETT. Not determined now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the paragraph for the purpose of offering this amendment? There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. I offer the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 29, at the end of line 22, insert:
"Provided further, That no street-railway company shall use the bridge herein authorized for its tracks until such company shall have paid to the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to one-sixth of the total cost of said bridge, one half thereof to be credited to the United States and the other half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For twelve heads of departments in high schools, a $2,000 each,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to a typographical error at the end of line 12, page 39.

Mr. GILLETT. I move that the letter "t" be added at the end of the line.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the word "a" will be changed to the word "at."

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, gas, and electric light and power, $85,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill with reference to contracts for fuel, gas, and electric light and power in the school buildings. Do the Commissioners of the District make these contracts, or the school authorities?

Mr. GILLETT. The Commissioners of the District do it. Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to ask further what rate are they paying for the use of gas in the public schools?

Mr. GILLETT. At the regular rate of $1 a thousand.
Mr. JOHNSON. Did the committee look into the question as to whether that was an excessive charge?

Mr. GILLETT. No; they did not. Mr. JOHNSON. There is no law fixing the rate at $1 a thousand, is there?

Mr. GILLETT. That is the regular rate. The gentleman will remember that at the last session of Congress we went at length into the question of the expense of the gas. The gentleman read the hearings, which were published. This year we did not go into that question at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the gentleman know whether the Commissioners have made any effort to find out whether these prices were excessive or whether they could do any better?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman knows, of course, that there has recently been a hearing before the Commissioners on the general subject of the price of gas. We may get the benefit of any action which results from that, but at present that is the price fixed by law.

If the proposition to reduce the price of gas, Mr. JOHNSON. which I understand is now before another committee, should be finally acted on before the 4th of March, does this provision contemplate that they shall pay for the ensuing year under the existing law or under the law as it will then stand?

Mr. GILLETT. This, of course, makes a gross appropriation, which will be paid under whatever law is in force at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is based upon the idea of $1 a thousand?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; it is based on the present law. We could not base it on anything else.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses, including furniture and repairs of same, stationery, printing, ice, purchase and repair of equipments for high school cadets, and other necessary items not otherwise provided for, including an allowance of $300 livery of horse or garage of automobile for the superintendent, and including not exceeding $1,000 for books, books of reference, and periodicals, $40,000.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 6, page 53, insert the following:
"For free evening lectures, to be given in the public school buildings or such halls as may be designated under rules and regulations of the board of education, $1,500."

Mr. BURLESON. To that amendment, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that it is not authorized by existing law. Does the gentleman make the point or reserve it?

Mr. BURLESON. I will reserve it if the gentleman from New York desires to discuss it.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would like to be heard on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. OLCOTT. There was an appropriation in last year's bill for free lectures, and such lectures are a part of the educational system provided for in the city of Washington. I scarcely think that the amendment suggests any new matter or is contrary to existing law. As far as the merits of the question are con-cerned, it seems to me that anyone who has considered it can appreciate the value of free lectures as a part of the public educational system, and must believe that they are matters of very great importance. Numbers of people who are dependent for their education and the continuance of their education upon the public school system are unable by reason of employment during school hours to obtain the benefits and advantages of the day schools. To such people these lectures are of great benefit. The lectures have been in existence not only in Washington, but in most of the cities, and always have been most beneficial in their results. I know that in the city of New York it is a part of the educational system of the community which under no circumstances would be dispensed with by the well-thinking people of that community.

Now, the amount asked for in this amendment is only $1,500. and in my mind, and I think in the minds of those who have carefully considered it, it is of great importance, and it will be a mistake on the part of this Congress to decline to make the appropriation, and I therefore hope that the point of order will be overruled and the amendment passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York inform the Chair whether under existing law the curriculum or course of study as prepared for the schools is controlled by the board of education or by the officials in the District?

Mr. OLCOTT. I do not quite understand the question of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under existing law, who has authority to determine as to the course of instruction and policy to be pursued in the schools; does the board of education have that control over the school curriculum?

Mr. OLCOTT. The board of education has control over the schools; it is given certain powers by Congress to control schools and to appoint a superintendent.

The CHAIRMAN. Would this be a limitation on the power of the board of education?

Mr. OLCOTT. It would direct a certain amount of money to be expended for a special purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is asking for information, whether, under existing law, a specific direction to the board of education does not change the authority which they now have under the law over the schools and courses to be pursued in the schools?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think this merely gives them the money to provide for specific instruction that Congress has determined heretofore is a part of the public instruction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman how Congress has determined that this is a part of public instruction?

Mr. OLCOTT. By putting such provision in previous appropriation bills, such appropriation to be expended for such specific use under the general authority that Congress has given to the board of public education.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the contention might be that it was a work in progress?

Mr. OLCOTT. It is a work in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The fact that it is in a previous appropriation bill would not make it law for the ensuing year.

Mr. OLCOTT. But this is merely continuing an appropriation for, as the Chair just remarked, a work which is now in

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the committee would have a right to make an appropriation for a branch of instruction that the board of education may not have provided for in its course of instruction, and that is all this amendment is. General control over the public schools has been vested by a general law in the board of public education, and that general authority includes the authority or power to provide for this branch of instruction, that and the other, and among other things doubtless a course of lectures, because it is essentially a branch of discipline and instruction in the public schools. It seems to me that the committee would have the right to say that $1,500 or $15,000, or any other sum, shall be used for the maintenance of a course of lectures. It is making an appropriation and directing its application, and there is authority for this course of instruction under the law. no doubt about that. Therefore there is authority for the appropriation, and the committee has the right to direct how the appropriation shall be used. It is a sort of general limitation. It seems to me that we have not surrendered the right to say that a particular branch of instruction shall be provided for in an appropriation bill, that there shall be so much money used for a particular branch or line of instruction, because it comes within the general law. The general law authorizes it. The amendment does not control the discretion of the board any more than any other limitation would control a discretion. A limitation of necessity does in a degree control the discretion of the officer who expends the money, and it is allowable if it controls the discretion within the legal authority of the board or officer. It can not go outside of that power, but it can specifically control within the power that already exists. Therefore it would strike me, without giving the subject a great deal of thought, that this amendment is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no specific authority under the law for such power in the board of education. As a matter of fact, there is a limitation upon the power of the board of education to admit pupils to public schools. A law that was enacted at the last session of Congress specifically prohibits free tuition in the public schools to any pupils except certain designated pupils. This is an attempt, at least, to take out of the limitation upon the power of the board fixed in that act the power to permit certain instruction for the benefit of all persons. Nothing in the school act of the last session provides for free lectures under the control of the board in the There is no law which authorizes free lecdifferent schools. tures. This provision itself contains the authority as well as makes the appropriation. The mere fact that in the present act making appropriations for the current fiscal year an item is carried for this purpose does not under the practice of the House make it an authorization to incorporate such a provision in this bill as if there were authority in the law for purpose. So that this provision is contrary to existing I call the attention of the Chair to the act approved that purpose. law.

April 4, 1966.

Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. The CHAIRMAN. FITZGERALD] allow the Chair to call his attention to the wording of the amendment which provides for lectures in buildings as may be designated under the rules and regulations of the board of education.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But there is no statutory authority for the board of education to make any such rules and regulations to have free lectures for any person in the District. As a matter of fact, the law specifically prohibits certain classes of persons from receiving free tuition in the public schools of the District of Columbia.

trict of Columbia.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the law specifically authorize the teaching of grammar or geography? Does it not put the whole subject under the control of the board of education?

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this is different.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not see why it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am pointing out the difference. The public schools of this District are not free to all classes of parsons. persons.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York inform the Chair whether under this sort of a provision it would not be the duty of the board of education to make rules and regulations so that the lectures should be free only to those persons who are entitled to free tuition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt about it; but in that respect it changes the existing law, which prohibits the board from receiving pupils or giving tuition to certain classes of persons in the District except upon the payment of certain fees.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course the power of Congress over the public schools is plenary, and Congress has provided by law for the government of the schools of the District through the board of education. As the Chair understands, the board of education has power under that law to provide in reference to the curriculum and has full authority within the limitations of the law. It seems to the Chair that it would not be within the province of Congress on an appropriation bill to add a provision requiring the board of education to teach a particular thing or use a particular text-book. On an appropriation bill an item limiting or changing the authority of the board of education would be subject to a point of order, and the Chair thinks that this item is for something not provided by law directly; that it is a limitation upon the power of the board of education not proper on an appropriation bill, and that it can not be called a work in progress, because the appropriation one year for that fiscal year does not indicate that it shall be continued by Congress. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter every male pupil in attendance at the high schools shall be admitted to and shall serve in the high school cadets unless excused from such service by the principal, on certificate of one of the medical inspectors of schools that he is physically disqualified for such service, or on the written request of his parent or guardian.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make the point of order on that paragraph, beginning on line 7 and ending on line

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order on lines 7 to 12, inclusive, page 53.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will allow me to explain the reason for that clause, I am in hopes he will withdraw his point of order. There is now in the high schools a cadet corps in each school. There is a good deal of rivalry in the different companies in the different schools as to who shall have the best drilled and the best appearing company, and consequently in some of the larger schools it has been the custom, prompted thereto by the desire to have the best appearing company, to try to prevent the small boys of the school from belonging to the company, who are very apt to be the ones who need the exercise and drilling more than any other; but in order that they may have a company of large boys, uniform in size, and consequently of excellent appearance, with a better chance of winning the prize, they kept the small boys out. Now, we thought that it was best that every boy should at least have the right to belong to a company; that if the physician thought he ought not join, or if his parents did not want him to join, it could be arranged that he need not be obliged to join, but that he had the right to join if he desired to do so, and for that reason we put in this clause.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman permit me?
Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. JOHNSON. To this extent I would be willing to go. As I read this language, it makes it obligatory upon every boy In other entering the high school to join these cadet companies. words, it forces the boy, unless he furnishes a certificate from the doctor or the written consent of his parents or guardian, to go into this military organization.

Mr. GILLETT. If his parents do not object. Mr. JOHNSON. Now, I would be willing to do this: To employ language so that any boy can be permitted, not that it shall be obligatory on his part, to go into this cadet organization, and it shall be obligatory on the part of the cadet organization of the schools to accept him if he does go. In other words, it would prevent them from keeping out the small boys.

Mr. GILLETT. It is the only purpose we are aiming at, Mr. Chairman, and if the gentleman can suggest any language which he thinks will provide better than this, I am perfectly willing to accept it; but I think if the gentleman will consider he will see we have to make it obligatory upon these boys who are officering the companies that they must accept the small boys. All we say is they shall be admitted, and we provide that if his parents or guardian excuse him he need not become a member thereof. Now we are aiming at the very purpose the gentleman has in mind, but I am perfectly willing, if he does not think this exactly effects that end, to accept any amendment that does; but I think the gentleman, if he reads the paragraph more carefully, will see it accomplishes what is desired.

Mr. JOHNSON. Am I correct in my impression of this language, that every boy in a high school shall join these companies? Mr. GILLETT. He shall be admitted unless the medical inspector or his parents ask that he be excused, and if his parents do not want him to join, then he is not compelled to do All they have to do is to say so. We do not leave it to the boy himself; we leave that to his parents; and I think the gentleman will recognize that the parents rather than the boy ought to decide.

Mr. JOHNSON. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For apparatus for the equipment and maintenance of school play-grounds, $1,500.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 6, after the last word, insert: "For purchase of additional playgrounds, $75,000."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point or order.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to be heard briefly on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will reserve it, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it, Mr. Chairman, from the decision of the Chair that was made the other day when we had this bill under consideration, that this amendment in the words in which I have offered it, and in the place in the bill where I have offered it, obviates all of the objections that were made by the Chair man in his reasons given for his decision when this amendment was offered to a prior paragraph. This comes in in the bill where the bill itself is speaking of and making provisions for the equipment and maintenance of playgrounds connected with the public schools. I think there can be no doubt that as the amendment is offered it is a part of the public school system of this city, just as much so and to the same extent as the paragraph which immediately precedes it, which provides for the maintenance and equipment of playgrounds, and to the same extent and in the same way as is provided a little later on in the bill for the purchase of sites for additional school buildings and the erection of school buildings thereon. So that it seems to me that in the same sense that these other items are considered as a work in progress, this would be likewise considered. I take it also from the decision that was made by the present occupant of the chair when we had under consideration the fortification appropriation bill, that certainly this item, coming as it is offered in this particular place in the bill, would be considered as a part of the school system and as a work in progress

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska permit the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Under his amendment does the gentleman from Nebraska think that the persons in authority would have the right to purchase ground for playgrounds anywhere within

Mr. NORRIS. Now that, of course, is a question, as I look at it, Mr. Chairman, that does not arise in the consideration of this amendment, even on its merits or on the technical proposition as to whether it is new legislation. I presume we might say in the amendment that it should be within a certain distance of the school building or something of that kind, but I do not see, as a technical proposition, how that would make it any less subject to a point of order than in the words in which I have offered it. I take it, Mr. Chairman, it does not necessarily have to be on the same lot or the same block. I take it that if there is a playground provided for the school children that the board of education would have the legal authority to make rules and regulations so that it can be used, when as a matter of fact the school itself might not be adjacent or be in session. A playground should not be only for the purpose of being used during the noon intermission or recess intermission, or something of that kind. It does not follow that it must be located right exactly contiguous to the school building. I take it that it could be as far as the technical proposition is concerned about its being in order or out of order, located anywhere, and provision could be made for allowing the children to play thereon without regard to whether school is actually in session or not.

Mr. BANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I am pleased to do so. Mr. BANNON. Does not the gentleman think there is less necessity for playgrounds in the city of Washington for the children than in cities that are devoted largely to commercial business and manufacture, and where the streets are more crowded than they are here and where there are not so many parks as there are here? In other words, does the same argument that applies in the larger cities, where they have manufacturing and commercial businesses, apply with the same effect in the city of Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. Bannon] that I think he asked a very pertinent and proper question as far as the merits of the bill are concerned, but, as I understand it, he just came in, and I will say that it is on a question of order that we have this matter up now. I will be glad, if the point of order is overruled, to answer that question at length, but I do not care, Mr. Chairman, at the present time to indulge in any discussion that does not properly come under the question of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not feel called upon to express any opinion as to whether an item would be in order to enlarge any present playground or the purchase of land adjacent to them. It has been held in a number of cases that where the Government owns land for a particular purpose, that it has bought or otherwise has, it was in order to add to the amount of ground by an appropriation as a work in progress. The Chair thinks that it has been the uniform ruling that the purchase of a new piece of ground for a new project, unless authorized by existing law, is subject to the point of order. While the present occupant of the chair is very much in sympathy with the idea of an appropriation for playgrounds, he feels constrained, as Chairman, to hold that the item is not authorized by law, and is not in order. The Chair therefore sustains the point or order.

Mr. BOUTELL. I offer an amendment at this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 6, page 54, after the word "playgrounds," the word "one" and insert "seventy-six;" and at the end of line 6 add: "provided none of this sum shall be available unless $75,000 are spent in purchasing new sites for playgrounds."

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order upon the amendment. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BOUTELL. I do not; I leave that to the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like the Clerk to read the paragraph as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the paragraph as it would read if amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

For apparatus for the equipment and maintenance of school play-grounds, $76,000, provided none of this sum shall be available unless $75,000 are spent in purchasing new sites for playgrounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the plans and specifications for school buildings shall be prepared under the supervision of the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, and shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District, and shall be constructed by the Commissioners in conformity therewith; and the plans and specifications for all other buildings provided for in this act shall be prepared under the supervision of the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, and shall be approved by the superintendent of the Capitol building and the Commissioners of the District, and shall be constructed in conformity therewith.

Mr. OL COUTE. Loffer the following amount after line 19.

Mr. OLCOTT. I offer the following amendment, after line 19. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 19, page 56, the following:
"Provided, That no part of the appropriations to provide for the exmses of the public schools shall be available, and that no warrant all be drawn against these appropriations, unless the meetings of the board of education and all its committees shall be open to the public.

Mr. GILLETT. I reserve the point of order upon that. Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering that amendment is because after a report from the District of Columbia Committee last year, which embodied practically a reorganization of the entire school system of the District, a bill was passed which contained a proviso for public hearings in all sessions of the board of education and the several committees of the board. It has been generally reported that in several in-stances hearings have been held which were not public, but, on the contrary, which were purposely held behind closed doors, so that the public could not know exactly what was going on in the committees and, in some instances, the board itself. It seemed to me that at least the spirit of the law which we passed at the last session has been violated by the board of education. It therefore seemed to me a proper time to offer an amendment to ask the committee in appropriating for the board of education to indicate to that body that the action of this House at its first session was worthy of some consideration by the board of education.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. OLCOTT. I think it is simply a limitation upon the appropriation. I have no particular remarks to make upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule a limitation is in order. Under the rules, however, an amendment in the form of a limitation which is not a limitation of expenditure, but is an affirmative change of law, is not in order. The Chair thinks this is not a limitation upon expenditures of money, but a change of The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

In all, $6,180.

Mr. GILLETT. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 22, after the word "all," strike out "six thousand one hundred and eighty," and insert in lieu thereof "four thousand two hundred and twenty."

Mr. GILLETT. That simply corrects the total.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For general incidental expenses of the service, $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the notes in the bill are only there for convenience.

For the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN., And not to be considered as a part of the bill and will be stricken out by the Clerk.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill. Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24103—the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had directed them to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the vote upon the amendments will be taken in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed. On motion of Mr. GILLETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the legislature of South Dakota, praying for an extension until the 1st of April, 1907, of the time in which persons who have here-tofore filed homestead claims in counties west of the Missouri River in the State of South Dakota may lawfully establish their residence upon these claims; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of South Dakota:

I, D. D. Wipf, secretary of state of South Dakota and keeper of the great seal thereof, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of senate joint resolution No. 5, as passed by the legislature of South Dakota, 1907, and of the whole thereof, and has been compared with the original now on file in this

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the reat seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre dis 17th day of January, 1907.

D. D. WIPF, Secretary of State. [SEAL.] joint resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to extend until April 1, 1907, the time within which persons who have heretofore filed homestead claims in counties west of the Missouri River in the State of South Dakota may lawfully establish their residence upon said claims.

establish their residence upon said claims.

Whereas large numbers of persons, many of whom are women, have during the summer of 1906 filed homestead claims upon the public lands west of the Missouri River in the State of South Dakota, in the belief and with the understanding that the extensions of the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railways, now being built over and across said lands from the Missouri River west to the Black Hills country, would be completed prior to January I, 1907, and would thus furnish means for said persons to go upon their several homestead claims and establish a residence as required by law; and

Whereas neither of said railroad extensions will be completed until some time during the summer of 1907; and

Whereas heavy snows have fallen and now lie over all of said country, rendering travel with building material, household goods, fuel, and supplies an impossibility, and extreme and unusually cold weather prevails throughout this and the northwestern country generally, making it dangerous to human life to attempt to go upon said claims at this time; and

whereas it is impossible to establish a residence or reside upon said lands under the present conditions of severely cold winter weather without comfortable houses to protect the lives and the health of said persons and their families: Now, therefore, be it *Resolved by the senate of the legislature of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That the President and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested and urged to extend until the 1st day of April, 1907, the time within which all such persons may lawfully establish their residence upon said claims.

[Indorsed.]

[Indorsed.] A joint resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to extend until April 1, 1907, the time within which persons who have heretofore filed homestead claims in counties wert of the Missouri River in the State of South Dakota may lawfully establish their residence upon said claims.

M. J. CHANEY, Speaker of the House.

JAMES W. CONE. Chief Clerk.

Howard C. Shober, President of the Senate.

Attest: L. M. Simons, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment authorizing the extension to the Federal building at Duluth, Minn., and proposing to appropriate $105,000 for the purpose of acquiring a new Federal building site, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for grading Albemarle street east from Connecticut avenue extended to Broad Branch road, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that all tracts of land, except parking areas, heretofore or hereafter acquired for use as public highways in the District of Columbia shall be opened for the use of the general public, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for the purchase of flags for use on Memorial Day in suitably decorating the graves of soldiers and sailors of the Union Army buried in national cemeteries, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. PLATT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEALING IN COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a bill—Senate bill 7988—regulating the use of telegraph lines and the mails in matters affecting gambling in cotton. In that connection I ask to have reprinted as a Senate document the text of the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of 1895, which will be found in the volume I have here, from page 2 to page 44, inclusive. I do not ask that the whole report, including the exhibits, be printed, but merely the text of the report.

Ordered, That so much of Senate Report No. 986, part 1, Fifty-third Congress, third session, on Cotton Production and Consumption, and Prices and the Remedy, as is contained on pages 2 to 44, inclusive, be reprinted. There being no objection, the order was agreed to, as follows:

PANAMA CANAL ZONE.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the RECORD an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered on the 7th of January, 1907, in which opinion the Supreme Court settled finally and forever the question of the sovereignty of the United States over the Panama Canal Zone, affirming the sovereignty of this country absolutely over that I ask to have it printed in the RECORD. territory.

There being no objection, the opinion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

(No. 43.—October Term, 1906.)

Warren B. Wilson, appellant, v. Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treury. Appeal from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

[January 7, 1907.]

In a general way it may be said that this is a suit brought in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by the appellant, alleging himself to be a citizen of Illinois and the owner of property subject to taxation by the United States, to restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from paying out money in the purchase of property for the construction of a canal at Panama, from borrowing money on the credit of the United States, from issuing bonds or making any payments under the act of Congress, June 28, 1902 (32 Stat., 481), providing for the acquisition of property and rights from Colombia and the canal company and the construction and operation of the canal and the Panama Raliroad. The Republic of Panama and the New Panama Canal Company of France were named parties defendant, but they were not served with process and made no appearance. A demurrer to the bill was sustained, and the bill dismissed. This decree was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, from whose decision this appeal was taken.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court.

affirmed by the Court of Appeals, from whose decision this appeal was taken.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court.

If the bill was only to restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from paying the specific sums named therein, to wit, $40,00,000 to the Panama Canal Company, and $10,000,000 to the Republic of Panama; it would be sufficient to note the fact, of which we may take judicial notice, that those payments have been made and that whether they were rightfully made or not is, so far as this suit is concerned, a moot question. Cheong Ah Moy v. United States, 113 U. S., 216; Mills v. Green, 159 U. S., 651; American Book Company v. Kansas, 193 U. S., 49; Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S., 147.

But the bill goes further and seeks to restrain the Secretary from paying out money for the construction of the canal, from borrowing money for that purpose, and issuing bonds of the United States therefor. In other words, the plaintiff invokes the aid of the courts to stop the Government of the United States from carrying into execution its declared purpose of constructing the Panama Canal. The magnitude of the plaintiff is demand is somewhat startling. The construction of a canal between the Atlantic and Pacific somewhere across the narrow strip of land which unites the two continents of America has engaged the attention not only of the United States, but of other countries for many years. Two routes, the Nicaragua and the Panama, have been the special objects of consideration. A company chartered under the laws of France undertook the construction of a canal at Panama. This was done under the superintendence and guidance of the famous Ferdinand de Lesseps, to whom the world owes the Suez Canal. To tell the story of all that was done in respect to the construction of this canal, prior to the active intervention of the United States, would take volumes. It is enough to say that the efforts of De Lesseps failed. Since then Panama has seceded from the Republic of Colombia and established a new republic, which them in silence must not be taken as even an implied ruling against their sufficiency. We prefer to rest our decision on the general scope of the bill.

Clearly there is no merit in plaintiff's contentions. That, generally speaking, a citizen may be protected against wrongful acts of the Government affecting him or his property may be conceded. That his remedy is by injunction does not follow. A suit for an injunction is an equitable proceeding, and the interests of the defendant are to be considered as well as those of the plaintiff. Ordinarily it will not be granted when there is adequate protection at law. In the case at bar it is clear not only that plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction, but also that he presents no ground for any relief.

He contends that whatever title the Government has was not acquired as provided in the act of June 28, 1902, by treaty with the Republic of Colombia. A short but sufficient answer is that subsequent ratification is equivalent to original authority. The title to what may be called the Isthmian or Canal Zone, which at the date of the act was in the Republic of Colombia, passed by an act of secession to the newly formed Republic of Panama. The latter was recognized as a nation by the President. A treaty with it, ceding the Canal Zone, was duly ratified. (33 Stat., 2234.) Congress has passed several acts based upon the title of the United States, among them one to provide a temporary government (33 Stat., 429); another, fixing the status of merchandise coming into the United States, from the Canal Zone (33 Stat., 843); another, prescribing the type of canal (34 Stat., 611). These show a full ratification by Congress of what has been done by the Executive. Their concurrent action is conclusive upon the courts. We have no supervising control over the political branch of the Government in its action within the limits of the Constitution. (Jones v. United States, 137 U.S., 202, and cases cited in the history of the United States to question the right of acquiring territory b 202, and cases cited in the opinion; In re Cooper, 143 U. S., 472, 499, 503.)

It is too late in the history of the United States to question the right of acquiring territory by treaty. Other objections are made to the validity of the right and title obtained from Panama by the treaty, but we find nothing in them deserving special notice.

Another contention, in support of which plaintiff has presented a voluminous argument, is that the United States has no power to engage in the work of digging this canal. His first proposition is that the Canal Zone is no part of the territory of the United States, and that, therefore, the Government is powerless to do anything of the kind therein. Article 2 of the treaty, heretofore referred to, "grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of a zône of land and land under water for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal." By article 3 Panama "grants to the United States all the rights, power, and authority within the Zone mentioned and described in article 2 of this agreement, * * which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory within which said lands and waters are located, to the entire exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority."

Other provisions of the treaty add to the grants named in these two articles further guaranties of exclusive rights of the United States in the construction and maintenance of this canal. It is hypercritical to contend that the title of the United States is imperfect, and that the territory described does not belong to this nation, because of the omission of some of the technical terms used in ordinary conveyances of real estate.

Further, it is said that the boundaries of the Zone are not described in the treaty; but the description is sufficient for identification, and stomations alone interested in the matter. The fact that there may possibly be in the future some dispute as to the exact boundary on either side is immaterial. Such disputes not infrequently attend conveyances of real estate or cessions of territory. Alaska was ceded to us forty years ago, but the boundary between it and the English possessions of certification, and the side is immaterial. Such disputes not infrequently attend conveyances of real estate or cessions of territory. Alaska was ceded to us forty years ago, but the boundary between it and the English possessions one ever doubted the title of this Republic to Alaska.

Again, plaintiff contends that the Government has no power to engage anywhere in the work of constructing a rallroad or cannl. The decisions of this court are adverse to this contention. In California v. Particle Rallroad Company (127 U. S. J. 35) it was said.

Practic Rallroad Company (127 U. S. J. 35) it was said, sunder the power of postal accommodations and military exigencies, had authority to pass these laws. The power to construct or to authorize individuals or corporations to construct national highways and bridges from State to State is essential to the complete control and regulation of interstate commerce. Without authority in Congress to established to the construct of the propersist of the conference of the power to establish ways of communication by land. The power in former times was exerted to a very limited extent, the Cumberland or National road being the most notable instance. Its exertion of the subject of the subject of commerce was then mostly conducted by water, and many of our statesmen entertained d

POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE AT SHEPHERDSTOWN, W. VA.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 7800) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va.

I may be permitted to state that it is a brief bill, introduced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 2, after the word "Maryland," to strike out the words "as the said company may deem suitable, for the passage of its road over the said river;" so as to make the section read:

the said river;" so as to make the section read:

That the Norfolk and Western Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized, in the improvement and relocation of its line, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River at or near Shepherdstown, W. Va., where the Potomac River forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Maryland, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 11, to strike out the word "passage" and insert the word "approval;" so as to make the section read:

That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge authorized by this act be commenced within two years and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. BURROWS. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTH-ERLAND] gave notice the other day that he would address the Senate to-day on Senate resolution 142. I ask that that resolution may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the request of the Senator from Michigan is complied with, I want to have some understanding as to Senate resolution No. 208—the Brownsville matter. It was made the special order for to-day immediately after the close of the morning business, and it is in order now. I do not want it displaced without an agreement that it shall be taken up immediately after the Senator from Utah shall have concluded his remarks. I do not wish to interfere with his speech. He gave notice that he would address the Senate at this time, and he is prepared to speak. I want to show him the courtesy we extend to everybody else, and therefore I do not insist upon taking up the resolution at this time, but I do wish that an understanding shall be agreed to that it shall be taken up immediately after he concludes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that resolution No. 208 be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the junior Senator from Utah. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM UTAH.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution called up by the Senator from Michigan.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. Burrows from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, June 11, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That REED SMOOT is not entitled to a seat as a Senator of the United States from the State of Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND obtained the floor.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I desire at this time, because of their great importance to my State, to ask first for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23561) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Walla Walla and Benton counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company, and then for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23560) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River between Benton and Franklin counties, in the State of Washington, by the North Coast Railroad Company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bills named by him.

Mr. BACON. Is not that a violation of the rule of the Senate,

Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is for unanimous consent. The Chair submits the question to the Senate. Is there

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not want to object, but I think that the purpose of the rule will be defeated if it can be evaded in that way. I do not like to object; but I think when a Senator rises to make a speech he ought not to be interrupted for the ordinary business of the Senate. I know that is the object of the rule, for I wrote it myself, although it was incorporated in another rule. I, however, suggested it, and I think I know what is its intention.

Mr. PILES. I withdraw the request, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington withdraws his request. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the resolution just laid before the Senate declaring that my colleague is not entitled to his seat is a matter of such profound concern not only to him personally, but to the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent as well, that I enter upon the discussion of it with a feeling of more than passing interest. I have no desire to unnecessarily occupy the time of the Senate, and I shall be as brief as the gravity of the issue and the wide range which the investigation itself has taken will permit.

In my own State the people are by no means united in their opinion respecting the merits of this controversy. There are extremists upon both sides holding widely divergent views. Neither side is necessarily wanting in honesty or in sincerity. Fanaticism may be entirely consistent with the love of truth and the desire for justice, although I have never discovered that it is any aid to the ascertainment of the one or the administration of the other. The fanatic in Utah, as elsewhere, does not look at the facts through his natural eyes. He uses a telescope—which is another name for his prejudices.

When he views the shortcomings of his neighbors he looks through the big end of the instrument, and when he looks at his own shortcomings he reverses the operation. The result is that to the eyes of the anti-Mormon extremist the evils of which he complains are, perhaps quite unconsciously to himself, exaggerated and magnified, and sometimes distorted, while to the eyes of the pro-Mormon extremist these same evils are minimized or not revealed at all. In what I shall have to say I do not expect and I shall not attempt to satisfy either of these extreme classes. I shall undertake to discuss the various questions involved with candor and state the facts and vindicate the truth according to my understanding.

I am not here, Mr. President, to justify wrongdoing in my own State, any more than I am here to justify wrongdoing in any other State. Whoever may be thus employed must bear his own responsibility. On the other hand, I shall not condemn simply because somebody else condemns, except where I believe condemnation to be justly due.

I do not understand it is the duty of this Senate in this investigation to ascertain whether Brigham Young was a model citizen or the reverse, or whether the keys of the Gospel are in the possession of the Utah branch of the church or the Josephite branch of the church, nor to ascertain whether the creed or the doctrines of the Mormon Church are in accordance with the twentieth-century standards of theology. While all of those questions may be interesting, they do not seem to me to be pertinent. Neither do I understand that we are here to try the Mormon Church or the Mormon leaders or lawbreakers generally or lawbreakers specially in the State of Utah or elsewhere, except in so far as those matters may reflect legitimate light upon the question which we are here to try and determine, namely, Is Senator Reed Smoot entitled to retain his seat in this Senate?

So far as that question is concerned, it has always seemed to me that the issue was clear-cut and simple. If Senator Smoot is a lawbreaker, either as principal or accessory; if he owes or recognizes allegiance to any power paramount to the allegiance which he owes to his flag and country; if by reason of his conduct he is so morally unfit that his continued presence in this Senate will bring shame and reproach upon it, he ought not to retain his seat. If he is not a lawbreaker, either in his own person or as aider or abettor of others; if he places his love of country, his devotion to his Government, his duty as a Senator of the United States above every other consideration; if he is not morally unfit, he ought not to be deprived of his seat in obedience to any feeling of prejudice within or popular demand from without this Chamber. His case ought to be determined upon broad considerations. Technicalities should not be invoked nor hair-splitting distinctions indulged either in favor of his retention or his expulsion.

In one sense the power of this Senate to deal with the accused Senator is plenary. It may be exercised arbitrarily. In a legal sense, the Senate is not accountable to any other authority or tribunal for its action. Right or wrong, wise or unwise, just or unjust, its decision becomes the unappealable law of the case. But, in another sense, and in a higher and a better and a juster sense, its action is restricted by those considerations of fundamental justice which find an abiding place in the conscience of every just man.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois], in his speech the other day, called the attention of the Senate to the fact that a very large number of petitions had been presented by the good women of this country, and it seemed to be in the mind of that Senator that these petitions should be regarded as of controlling force.

I do not intend to express any opinion upon the question as to whether petitions addressed to this Senate, suggesting or demanding that a particular judgment should be rendered in a case involving the right of a Senator to his seat, are as much out of place as would be similar petitions addressed to a court of justice engaged in a purely judicial inquiry. Perhaps something could be said upon either side of that proposition.

The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress shall make no law abridging the right of the people to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. The language is peculiar. It does not confer a new right, but recognizes a preexisting right, with which Congress is forbidden to interfere. Whether the framers of the Constitution had in mind a case like this, which is at least quasi judicial in character, which has to do with the privileges of the Senate, which does not involve any question of legislation or of governmental policy, is at least questionable. However that may be, the privilege, if not the right, of petition has been freely exercised by the people in this case; and, whatever may be the proprieties of the matter, one thing seems certain—that Senators can not permit themselves to be swayed in the slightest degree from a just determination of this case upon the merits by petitions, however numerous or by whomsoever signed.

The fathers of the Constitution intended that this great Senate should be a conservative force, a deliberative body, that should neither blindly follow nor impatiently reject the demands of the multitude. I can conceive of cases—cases involving questions of legislation, questions of political or governmental policy—where the demands of the people should not only be heeded, but should be obeyed. But I respectfully submit that this is a case where the right of one individual is more sacred than the mere demand of all the people.

Mr. President, I yield to no man in my respect for that great body of Christian and patriotic women who have brought to us these vast petitions praying for Senator Smoot's expulsion. to their good faith, as to their desire that only justice should be done, I make no question, and I have no doubt but the responsibility of the decision of this case is with us and not with them. Whether they are familiar with the facts, we know not; whether they have read the mass of testimony taken before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we know not; whether they are seeking to hold the Senator from Utah accountable only for his own acts, or to punish him vicariously for the sins of others, for which he is not responsible and with which he does not sympathize, we know not. But this much we do know, that whether the prayer of these petitions be based upon an actual knowledge and a calm review of the facts, or upon a misconception of the facts, each of us must render his judgment after a passionless consideration of the evidence and a judicial determination of the truth, else in the high court of his own conscience he stands forsworn.

Mr. President, this investigation has been in progress before the Committee on Privileges and Elections for a period exceeding two years. It has been conducted with great care, great deliberation, and great diligence. The results are to be found in four large volumes of closely printed matter, aggregating some 3,000 pages. I think it is fair to assume that whatever could be said either for or against the position of the Senator from Utah must be found somewhere in that record. To travel outside into the domain of idle gossip or mere rumor, to invoke sensational and perhaps unfounded articles contained in newspapers, magazines, or books would seem to be not only unnecessary, but unfair.

I repeat, Mr. President, and emphasize-because it is an important fact-that this investigation has been in progress before this committee for a period exceeding two years. Eminent counsel have appeared upon both sides of the controversy. Large sums of money have been expended in the search for and the production of evidence. Something more than 100 witnesses personally appeared before the committee and gave testimony under oath. The books and the publications of the Mormon Church, the sermons and the declarations of the Mormon leaders, the statements of friends and opponents-sometimes authentic and sometimes not-from the foundation of the church, more than seventy years ago, to the present time, have been produced and are to be found in these pages. Everything, however trivial; everything, however unimportant; everything that could reflect the slightest light, and very much that by no possibility could reflect any light at all, upon the question with which we have to deal has been searched out and produced and spread upon the pages of this record. I submit that if justification can not be found somewhere in these pages for the expulsion of the Senator from Utah, it is fair to presume, con-Clusively presume, that no such justification exists.

Mr. President, it would tend to a better understanding of this case, as it does to every case, if we were able first of all to accurately determine and precisely define the issues which we are called upon to adjudicate, but this no one can do except in a more or less tentative fashion. Some of the charges originally made were so vague; others have become so clouded and uncertain and indefinite by being first asserted, afterwards withdrawn, and then partially reinstated, that no man can read this record and determine from it precisely what are the grounds relied upon by those representing the protestants. Two protests have been presented to the Senate and have been considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections-the first a general protest signed by nineteen citizens of Salt Lake, the second a special protest signed by one John L. Leilich alone. The first or general protest contains this significant statement:

We charge him-

with no offense cognizable by law.

That statement means, if it means anything, that it is not pretended that Senator Smoot has ever violated the law against polygamy or any other law; it means, if it means anything, that he has not aided or abetted any other person in the violation of the law against polygamy or any other law; it means, finally, if it means anything, that he has not engaged in any conspiracy with others for the violation of the law against polygamy or any other law, because, I do not need to say to the Senate, that to engage in such a conspiracy would be an offense cognizable by the law of every State in the Union.

Mr. President, I emphasize that last phase of this matter because it has been asserted here with more or less earnestness that the proof establishes that Senator Smoot has engaged in some such conspiracy. The gentleman who prepared this general protest was a witness before the committee. It appears from the testimony that he prepared the protest after very careful study and thorough consideration of all the facts. I happen to know that gentleman—Mr. Critchlow—very well indeed. I have known him intimately. He has been my warm personal friend for a great many years. I know him to be a lawyer of exceptional ability and of ripe and accurate judgment upon a proposition of law.

Another of the signers of the protest is Mr. P. L. Williams, also a resident of the State, who has lived there for the past thirty or more years. Mr. Williams is also a lawyer whom I know well. I was a law partner of his for many years, and I know that in ability as a lawyer he stands second to no man in the West.

This protest is also signed by other lawyers of ability and standing at the bar of that State.

When these lawyers put into that protest the language which I have quoted—"We charge him with no offense cognizable by law"—they were not indulging in some idle or meaningless phrase. They were stating deliberately precisely what they meant to state. I shall have occasion as I go along to show that they are entirely correct in that statement; but for the present I content myself by saying that I will place the judgment of these lawyers, with full and accurate knowledge of the facts, against the judgment of anybody who asserts to the contrary, that Senator Smoot has violated any law himself, that he has aided or abetted any other person in the violation of law, or that he has engaged in any conspiracy for the violation or subversion of the law.

One of the signers of this original protest is John L. Leilich, who also signed the special protest. It appears from the evidence that Mr. Leilich signed this original protest after having read it over and thoroughly considered it. He therefore asserted, as did the other petitioners, that Senator Smoot was not guilty of any offense cognizable by law. Then Mr. Leilich, with unexplained and unexplainable inconsistency, immediately turns about and makes his special protest, in which he alleges in specific and detailed terms that Senator Smoot is a polygamist and therefore has made himself amenable to the laws of the State of Utah. That charge in Mr. Leilich's protest is in this language, and I desire to read it to the Senate:

Thirteenth. That the said REED SMOOT is a polygamist, and that since the admission of Utah into the union of States he, although then and there having a legal wife, married a plural wife in the State of Utah in violation of the laws and compacts hereinbefore described, and since such plural or polygamous marriage the said REED SMOOT has lived and cohabited with both his legal wife and his plural wife in the State of Utah and elsewhere, as occasion offered, and that the only record of such plural marriage is the secret record made and kept by the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, which secret record is in the exclusive custody and control of the first presidency and the quorum of the twelve apostles of the said church, of which the said REED SMOOT is one, and is beyond the control or power of the protestants.

Protestants in the plural.

Evidently Mr. Leilich expected in the beginning that somebody else was going to sign this protest with him. It appears that he was unable in the whole State of Utah to find anybody who would agree with his statement.

Your protestants respectfully ask that the Senate of the United States or its appropriate committee compel the first presidency and the quorum of the twelve apostles and the said Reed Smoot to produce such secret record for the consideration of the Senate. Your protestants say that they are advised by counsel that it is inexpedient at this time to give further particulars concerning such plural marriage and its results or the place it was solemnized or the maiden name of the plural wife.

And there, Mr. President, so far as this investigation before the committee or before the Senate is concerned, this matter with reference to the charge of polygamy rested, except that from time to time during the progress of the investigation before the committee this charge of Mr. Leilich was repudiated by the counsel for the protestants, Mr. Tayler, and by members of the committee, as, for instance, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] and by other members of the committee. For example, Mr. Tayler, in making his opening statement to the committee, made use of this expression:

I merely say, respecting the charge made in the supplemental protest, that I do not know, and therefore can not say to the committee, that proof will be made sustaining the charge of what is called "the Leilich protest," to the effect that Mr. Smoor is a polygamist.

And again, upon at least three separate and distinct occasions

Mr. Tayler repeated that he did not stand, nor did the protestants whom he represented, stand for that charge.

In the course of the proceedings before the committee this occurred after a colloquy between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois]. The Senator from Idaho stated:

Senator Dubots. No; I do not include the Senator from Vermont, who thought that we were trying Mr. Smoot upon the charge of his being a polygamist, or of his having taken an oath as an apostle which was incompatible with his oath as a Senator. That charge was not preferred by the committee of nineteen from Salt Lake City, Utah. That charge was preferred by an individual named Leilich, and was repudiated instantly by telegram from the protestants—the nineteen—and no one ever appeared here, and it was stated in the first meeting, in answer to a direct question, that no one was present to press those charges.

One of the witnesses who was called before the committee was Doctor Buckley, a gentleman who is known by reputation probably to every member of the Senate. Doctor Buckley testified that he had gone to Salt Lake while this investigation was in progress. He was asked, I think by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], to state if he had any personal knowledge with regard to Senator Smoot, and Doctor Buckley answered:

No. While I was there I asked all sorts of people, Mormons and others, whom I met how Senator Smoor stood in the whole community, the whole general community, and I got plenty of answers. Would it be proper for me to say that not a syllable was breathed against him; that many commended him highly?

And again, further on, Doctor Buckley proceeded:

And again, further on, Doctor Buckley proceeded:

Every person I saw—and the number was as many as I could see at the principal hotel, at a church to which I went, where there were more than a thousand people, with scores of whom I spoke afterwards—wherever I asked the question, "What kind of a man is Mr. SMOOT?" whether he was a polygamist or anybody believed he was a polygamist, I am compelled to say that I did not find, either in California, where I had been for months at a convention, or while I was in Utah, a single person who said one word against Mr. SMOOT. Nor did I find one person who believed that he had ever been married to anyone but his wife or had otherwise lived with any woman who was not his wife. That is the fact in the case. Republicans and Democrats, Mormons and Gentiles, all talked in that way. How many I saw I can not tell, for I did not expect ever to keep that fact in mind as of any importance.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The New York Christian Advocate. Mr. SUTHERLAND. He went there upon this special errand and to make this inquiry among others, and was therefore engaged in this very investigation. This was the result of his inquiries.

Mr. President, this record is full of similar statements. am not going to take the time of the Senate to read any of them or to call further attention to them. Of course, there is to-day in the United States no well-informed person who believes or contends that Senator Smoot is a polygamist, but this charge, originally made by Mr. Leilich, has been repeated and reiterated by irresponsible persons and irresponsible newspapers from one end of this country to the other, until it has gained wide circulation and has been given general credence throughout the country.

A lie travels fast; the truth crawls slowly; and so, while it is true that this charge of Mr. Leilich was instantly repudiated by the other signers of this protest, and while it is true that Mr. Tayler, representing the protestants, repudiated it before the committee, and while there is not a syllable of testimony before the committee that even raises a suspicion that Mr. Smoot is a polygamist, while there is an abundance of testimony to the precise contrary, still this charge of polygamy is even to this day believed by a very large number of people in the United States.

As late as March 13, 1906, less than a year ago, the New York World contained in its columns an article upon this subject, and I call attention to that simply as illustrative. Practically the same article appeared or the same pretended facts were stated in scores of papers throughout the country. I am not going to read the article entire. It covers nearly a whole column in length. It asserts, upon the statement of one Rev. N. E. Clemenson, a Presbyterian minister, residing in the State of Utah, that Senator Smoot is a polygamist, and goes on to give the details and undertakes to give the names of his wives. It says that one of the wives has borne him a son, and gives the name of that son. It declares that these wives have been spirited out of the State, and goes into sensational details with reference to that, all of which is utterly false, of course. Let me read the headlines:

Reveals names of polygamous wives of SMOOT. Rev. N. E. Clemenson, of Logan, Utah, tells the confession made to him by wife No. 2, who was Rose Hamilton, of Milwaukee, of her marriage and her flight from a United States marshal. Spirited away at time of Senate in-

Fled from State to State when investigation was on foot to unseat the Senator—had borne a son to her Mormon husband—wife No. was one Lottie Greenwood.

Under those sensational headlines the New York World proceeds to give in detail the story I have stated, upon the authority of this man Clemenson.

Clemenson was evidently not content with stating this in the New York World, because he proceeded to make a business of going up and down the country delivering lectures upon this subject, declaring in those lectures substantially the same pretended facts that are stated in the New York World article. For example, I find in the Troy (N. Y.) Times, dated April 5, 1906, the account of a meeting which was addressed by the Rev. Dr. Newton E. Clemenson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Logan, Utah. The lecture was delivered in a church to a congregation of men and women, and in the course of his lecture, as appears by this account, he again made these statements. I have in my possession a number of other clippings, where he has made similar statements in other parts of the country. The papers were full of it. It has been reprinted over and over again from one end of the country to the other.

Now, of course, this question as to Senator Smoor's being a polygamist is no longer of any consequence here in this inquiry, but to my mind it reflects a world of light upon the attitude of these good women and these good men who have brought to us these great petitions. Of course there is no way of accurately determining the fact, but I venture to say that if the truth could be known, a very large majority of the women who have signed these petitions have done so in the firm belief, induced by slanderous and libelous statements such as these, that Senator Smoot is a polygamist, having anywhere from two to a dozen wives.

I have had occasion myself during the last few weeks-and other Senators have told me that they have had similar occasion—to deny stories of this kind. People have said to me, "Senator Smoot ought to be expelled." I have asked, "Why?" They have said, "Because he is a polygamist." I have nevered in portion of the said. them, "You are entirely mistaken. Senator Smoot is not a polygamist. I know him intimately. I know his family. I know his neighbors. I think I know all about it; and I know as well as I know anything concerning another that he is not a polygamist." Then these people have said to me, "Then what in the world is all the row about?

To show how fixed this opinion is in the minds of the people, I call attention to an editorial contained in the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer of date January 12, 1907, after the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] had delivered his speech upon this question. It would be supposed that the editor of that paper-because he speaks of the speech of the Senator from Illinois—would have had before him that speech. But he proceeds editorially to deliver himself as follows under the caption,

"The Smoot Case:

Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois, is the first Senator to raise his voice in favor of Smoot. According to Hopkins, Smoot is an apostle of a high grade of Mormonism that abominates polygamy. The evidence is that Smoot himself has been guilty of plural marriage. It seems to the Intelligencer that this is the only point at issue. With Mr. Smoot's religious views and practices, so long as those views and practices are not in violation of the law, the United States Senate has no interest. Does he or does he not practice polygamy? That is the question. The evidence submitted thus far indicates that he is a practicer of polygamy and a lawbreaker. As such he should not hold his seat in the Senate. Senate.

And, Mr. President, this paper is called the Intelligencer. It seems to me the name is slightly overdrawn.

Another charge which is made by Mr. Leilich and not contained in the general protest, and therefore discredited prima facie, is that Senator Smoor, as an apostle or otherwise, has taken an oath inconsistent with his obligations as a Senator of the United States.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.
Mr. BURROWS. I think in justice to the committee, in view of what the Senator has quoted from the public press, it ought to be publicly stated in this connection that the committee in its report fully exonerated the senior Senator from Utah from the charge of polygamy, and if the Senator will allow me I will read from page 7 of the report:

As regards the charge that Mr. Smoot has a plural wife, this fact, if proved, is conceded by Mr. Smoot and his counsel to be sufficient to disqualify him from holding a seat in the Senate. But this accusation seems to have been made by Mr. Lellich unadvisedly and on his own responsibility, and without any sufficient evidence in support of the same. This charge is not made in the main protest, and counsel for the protestants at the outset of the investigation very frankly admitted that they had no proof to offer in support of this allegation.

The public ought to have known that if they had read the report. And if the Senator from Utah will pardon me a moment further, in the remarks which I had the honor of making on this case, at page 4, I stated:

Let me say at the outset, touching the charge that the Senator from Utah is a polygamist, and for that reason disqualified from holding a seat in this body, no evidence was submitted to the committee in support of such allegation, and, so far as the investigation discloses, the Senator stands acquitted of that charge. This relieves the inquiry of its personal character, always distressing, and the Senator stands before the Senate in personal character and bearing above criticism and beyond reproach, and if found disqualified for membership in this body it must be upon other grounds and from other considerations.

I wanted to state this in order that it should be known that the charge that the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] is a polygamist has been absolutely repudiated by the committee and also in the remarks I had the honor of making.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Utah, before he resumes his remarks, allow me to say a word?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator in his remarks referred to an editorial in a paper in my home city. I hope the Senator has a recent editorial in which the editor quoted the language just now read by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] and in which he corrects the editorial which the junior Senator from Utah has just read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that I have not that article, but my attention has been I have been told that there is such an editorial. called to it. Of course, the difficulty with matters of that kind is that ordinarily a thousand people read the original charge because there is something bad about a man in it, and perhaps only one reads That is the great difficulty with that sort of

I am very glad that the Senator from Michigan has made the statement he has. He is entirely correct about it. The committee did exonorate Senator Smoor of this charge and the Senator from Michigan in his speech did the same. I am not complaining about the committee. I thought I had made my-self clearly understood about that. I am speaking of this matter with reference to the attitude of the public, with reference cuse any member of the committee of desiring to do anything unfair. Such men as the Rev. Mr. Clemenson, of Logan, Utah, are the people who are responsible. Mr. Clemenson, who is referred to in these various articles and who, by making the charge that the Senator from Utah has violated the seventh commandment, himself so shamelessly disregards the ninth commandment, is a resident of the State of Utah, where he has lived, as I understand, practically all his life.

It is to be presumed that he knows what every well-informed person in the State knows, namely, that Senator Smoot is not even suspected of being a polygamist. The Reverend Buckley, to whose testimony I called attention, has stated that, although he inquired of scores of people in Salt Lake, he failed to find a single one who believed that Senator Smoot was a polygamist or had otherwise lived with any woman other than his wife.

Mr. President, it may seem a harsh thing to say, but I believe it to be a just thing to say, that when Mr. Clemenson made this charge he deliberately stated what he knew to be false, or at least what he had no reason to believe was true. There are no words sufficiently severe with which to characterize that kind of a man. Any man, and particularly any man who wears the cloth of the profession of God, who would deliberately make a false statement of that character about another, and especially when that other was engaged in a contest before the Senate and before the country for the preservation of his good name, deserves to be cast out of decent society and pilloried with the contempt of honest men for all time to come.

But, Mr. President, I had begun to discuss the question of this inconsistent oath, and, as I have said, that charge is made by Mr. Leilich alone. So far as that allegation is concerned, it is not made by anybody else. To my mind it is a significant fact that this charge is not contained in the general pro-Most of the men who signed the general protest are residents of Utah who have lived there for upward of a quarter of a century. At the time this protest was made and for many years prior thereto, there were in the State of Utah hundreds, if not thousands, of persons who had prior to that time been adherents of the Mormon Church, but who had severed their connection with or had been excommunicated from the church. Those people, or at least a very large number of them, have gone through the endowment-house ceremonies, where it is said this oath is taken. If such an oath as that is administered in those ceremonies, these men and women have taken it and they know it. With these hundreds and thousands of men and women living in the State of Utah-informed about this matter, having severed their connection with the church and therefore not having any undue friendship for the church-it would be a remarkable thing if this fact had not been spoken about by them so often as to become notorious in the State-a matter of common knowledge-and it would be still more remarkable if some of the signers of this protest should not have heard of that and have made some allegations concerning it, at least upon information and belief. So it is significant that the general protest upon which Senator Smoot has thus far been tried does not contain this charge at all, either upon information and belief or otherwise.

Now, this charge, like the others, was repudiated in the committee by the counsel for the protestants as many as three or four different times. As I recall it, it was stated before the committee that the other signers of the protest had repudiated this charge by telegraph.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] during the course of the examination, speaking both with respect to the charge of Mr. Smoot being a polygamist and the charge of his having taken an inconsistent oath, said:

Mr. Chairman, I want to bear my testimony as to what occurred. Both of those contentions were set aside entirely. It was not contended that they should be attempted to be proven by the attorneys representing the protestants. Those two questions being entirely eliminated, the counsel for the protestants announced what he would attempt to prove, which is set forth in the proceedings of the committee, and on that the hearing was ordered. It was not ordered at all either upon the charge that Mr. Smoor was a polygamist or that he had taken an oath incompatible with his oath as a Senator.

That charge having been repudiated by the counsel for the protestants, it having been repudiated by the protestants themselves, it being conceded that there was no such issue before the committee, the Senate will probably be curious to know how the question has arisen. It came about in this way: When Mr. Lyman, an apostle of the church, was upon the stand he said something with reference to the endowment-house ceremonies. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows], chairman of the committee, then asked him if he would not state to the committee the endowment-house ceremonies. Mr. Lyman answered that he could not do so, and said further along—some witness did, and I think it was Mr. Lyman—that they were of a sacred and secret character and that he did not care to discuss them. But Mr. Lyman did state:

I remember that I agreed to be an upright and moral man, pure in my life. I agreed to refrain from sexual commerce with any woman except my wife or wives as were given to me in the priesthood. The law of purity I subscribed to willingly, of my own choice, and to be true and good to all men. I took no oath ror obligation against any person or any country or government or kingdom or anything of that kind. I remember that distinctly.

Further along, when another witness was upon the stand, the chairman of the committee again asked the question, and similar replies were made. Some other witnesses were also examined with reference to it, always, as I remember, by the chairman of the committee and never by the counsel for the protestants.

Now, after that had occurred three witnesses were brought from Salt Lake to testify upon this subject. Those three witnesses were Mr. Wallis, Mr. Lundstrom, and Mrs. Elliott. Mr. J. H. Wallis testified that he had gone through these ceremonies, and he gave upon the first occasion when he was called to the stand this version of the oath:

Mr. Wallis (standing up). "That you and each of you do promise and yow that you will never cease to importune high heaven to avenge the blood of the prophets upon the nations of the earth or the inhabitants of the earth." ants of the earth

I could not tell you exactly which it was.

Now, after having had a night to sleep on the subject, he came back the next morning and said he was mistaken in the version he had given, and he then proceeded to give this version of it:

Mr. Wallis. "That you and each of you will never cease to importune high heaven for vengeance upon this nation for the blood of the prophets who have been slain." That is as near as I can get at it; that is the substance of it.

Mr. Worthington. Was there anything in that obligation about inhabitants?

inhabitants?

Mr. Wolffington, was there anything in that obligation about inhabitants?

Mr. Wallis, Nothing about inhabitants, I found I was wrong about that.

So he states when he first comes upon the stand that the oath was to ask vengeance upon the nations of the earth or the in-habitants of the earth, and he did not know which, and the next morning it was upon "this nation."

The next witness who was called was Mr. Lundstrom. His version of the oath is as follows:

"We and each of us solemnly covenant and promise that we shall ask God to averge the blood of Joseph Smith upon this nation." There is something more added, but that is all I can remember verbatim. That is the essential part,

Mrs. Elliott gave this version of the oath:

One I remember. They told me to pray and never cease to pray to get revenge on the blood of the prophets on this nation, and also teach it to my children and children's children.

Now, as to these three witnesses, and taking them up in their order, first as to Mr. Wallis: Witnesses were brought from Salt Lake and testified before the committee—and although more than a year elapsed before the case was finally closed the testimony remained absolutely uncontradicted—that they knew Mr. Wallis, that he lived in Salt Lake, that they knew his reputation in that companies for the contradiction in that companies for the contradiction in the companies of the contradiction in the contradicti in that community for truth and veracity, and that it was bad. Other witnesses testified that he was a drunkard; that he had been convicted before the police court for drunkenness. Another witness testified that he was of unsound mind, and that he had claimed personally that he had communication with the devil.

The next witness, Mr. Lundstrom, was also shown to be a person unworthy of belief. Witnesses, also absolutely uncontradicted, of good repute and standing in the community, testified that they knew his reputation for truth and veracity, and that it was bad.

Mrs. Annie Elliott, after giving her version of the oath, said she had never made this statement to any other person; that when she stated it upon the stand it was the first time she had made any statement regarding it, and she said that if Mr. Tayler, the counsel, was examining her from a memorandum, she had not the least idea where he had obtained it.

Mrs. Elliott also testified that she was then living with her second husband. She was asked what had become of her first husband. She replied that he was dead. Upon cross-examination she gave the date of his death as being October, 1897. The Senate will be interested and somewhat surprised to know that later on in that investigation this husband who was declared to be dead himself appeared before the committee in the flesh and gave the committee to understand that the statements regarding his death made by his wife were considerably exaggerated.

That is the character of the testimony which is brought here to show that this oath is taken. I am not going to stop to read to the Senate the testimony to the contrary. A large number of witnesses were called, among them four or five who had formerly been members of the church and who had severed their connection with the church, and each of them testified that no such oath was taken at all. They had gone through these ceremonies; they had taken whatever obligations were taken by anybody; and they swore positively that no such obligation was

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact, as I now remember it from the testimony, that the first husband of Mrs. Elliott testified that he had been in constant communication with the children of Mrs. Elliott, who were living with her. So she could not have been misled as to the fact that he was alive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Illinois is en-tirely correct about that. She did testify that the children had been in communication with the father, so that she knew absolutely that what she was stating was not the fact.

Now, as I said, four or five of these witnesses--I do not recall just how many-were at the time they testified not members of the church. Of course they had to be members of the church at the time they went through the endowment-house ceremonies.

Thus the case was when it was rested upon both sides and submitted to the final determination of the committee, on It was supposed by everybody to be closed, January 27, 1905. but to the astonishment of at least some people it was reopened more than a year later, namely, on February 6, 1906. This was after all the arguments had been made and after the whole case had been submitted to the committee. The case was reopened and four witnesses were produced to testify with reference to this oath. Those four witnesses were Prof. Walter M. Wolfe, William J. Thomas, John P. Holmgren, and Henry W. Lawrence.

Professor Wolfe gave his version of the oath as follows:

Mr. Wolfe. The law of vengeance is this: "You and each of you do covenant and promise that you will pray, and never cease to pray, Almighty God to avenge the blood of the prophets upon this nation, and that you will teach the same to your children and your children's children unto the third and fourth generations."

Mrs. Elliott said it was to teach it to their children and their children's children, but Professor Wolfe adds unto the third and fourth generations. It was shown that Professor Wolfe had joined the Mormon Church ten or twelve years before he testified; that immediately after joining the church he had gone through the endowment house ceremonies; and he testified that although he believed the very first time he took this obligation that the seeds of treason were planted in it, he yet testified that he took it eleven times again, the last time within a year or two before he appeared before the committee. He continued to be a member of the church until three weeks before he appeared upon the stand, at which time he was excommunicated for drunkenness. He lost his professorship in one of the col-leges and was excommunicated from the church.

I have not the testimony of Mr. Thomas here, but Mr. Thomas testified that some such oath was administered. There was a cross-examination of Mr. Thomas that is somewhat interesting. On pages 71 and 72 of the fourth volume he was examined and some questions were asked him by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox].

John P. Holmgren, the third witness, in his version did not use the word "nation" at all.

Henry W. Lawrence was a member of the church away back in the sixties, and left the church about that time and, by the way, he is a man of excellent repute in Salt Lake City; I know him well, and am glad to testify to it here. Mr. Lawrence testified that he had not only taken these obligations himself, but that he had been one of those who administered the ceremony; that he had administered the oaths or the obligations, whatever they were which were given, hundreds of times, and Mr. Law-rence swore positively that the word "nation" was not mentioned at all in the oath.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. He is not a Mormon now?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is not a Mormon now. As I said, he left the church away back in the sixties. He swore there was no such word named at all in the oath.

So we have the testimony of five witnesses who say the word "nation" is used, and of those five witnesses, four of them are shown to be utterly unworthy of belief-drunkards and of unsound mind-and one of them says that he has communications with His Satanic Majesty.

Mr. FORAKER. And one is a perjurer. Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; and one whose perjury is shown by her own testimony.

Mr. President, that there is some sort of an archaic obligation taken in these ceremonies I have no doubt. I do not know just what it is. But that there is any obligation that is hostile to this Government in any sense whatever there is not a shred of testimony worthy of belief in this record to establish. It is probably explained by the testimony of Mr. Lawrence. Mr. Lawrence says that in the ceremony two verses of the New Testament are read. I thought I had them here, but I find I have not. One of them is in Revelation and reads:

And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost Thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

Probably the whole thing arose from that. Some such obligation, founded upon that verse of Scripture, may be administered.

Now, Mr. President, that disposes of the two charges of polygamy and of having taken an inconsistent oath, and it seems to me it is shown beyond question-

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Some of us regard the proposition which the Senator from Utah is now discussing as exceedingly important. I have not had the pleasure, on account of having been called out of the Chamber, to hear all the Senator has said. I should like to ask him what the testimony of Senator Smoot was upon that subject, as to the oath.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am very glad, indeed, that the Senator has called my attention to that matter. I had overlooked it. Senator Smoot denied in positive terms that any such oath was taken. If the Senator is curious to look at his testimony, he will find it in the third volume, at pages 184 and 185 of the record. There the Senator from Texas will find that Senator Smoot positively denied that any such obligation as that was taken or any obligation that imported in any way hostility to the Government.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. BURROWS. Ought not the Senator to state in this connection that the Senator from Utah absolutely refused to disclose what the oath was?

· Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to stating in this connection that that is correct. The Senator from Utah declined to state what these obligations were, and so did other witnesses; and they declined to state it upon precisely the same theory that a member of the Masonic order or any other secret society would decline if called to testify about the ceremonies of his order. Unless he were compelled, he would absolutely decline to state what were in those ceremonies. would be perfectly willing to state what was not in them. Any Mason would be willing to state that there is nothing in the Masonic ceremonies or ritual that in any way imports hostility to the Government, but if he were asked to state in detail what those ceremonies were, in all probability he would decline to state them. Upon precisely the same ground Senator Smoot and these other witnesses who are still members of the church declined to state them.

Mr. GALLINGER. A Mason would absolutely decline to state them.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to call to the attention of the Senator.

ator now addressing the Senate the fact that the witnesses who declined to give the oaths did state that they were of a religious character and that there was nothing in them that was hostile to the Government in any form.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; that is quite correct. I think I have substantially stated it.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that this charge of polygamy and this charge of having taken an inconsistent oath are both absolutely unfounded in fact. That brings us back to this general protest, which contains, as I have already said, the significant statement, "We charge him with no offense cognizable by law." What, then, are the offenses not cognizable by law which are deemed to be sufficiently grave to justify the Senate in depriving a Senator of his seat?

I think everyone who will read this record will discover that it evidences a good deal of confusion of mind on the part of those representing the protestants as to the precise nature or extent of these offenses. It must be manifest that any offense which would warrant the Senate in declaring that a duly elected, duly accredited, and constitutionally qualified Senator was not entitled to retain his seat must be of the gravest possible character, and such as to evidence beyond all cavil that he was utterly unfit to sit here.

This Senate is not a voluntary association from which members may be expelled because we do not like them, or because other people, however numerous, do not like them. Membership in this body is a matter not of grace, but of right, and who-ever challenges the right takes upon himself the burden of establishing beyond all reasonable question the justice of his challenge.

It seems to me that the offenses not cognizable by law may be discussed under two propositions: First, that polygamy and polygamous cohabitation are still practiced by some members of the Mormon Church, of which church Senator Smoot is an apostle; second, that this church claims the right and exercises the authority of dictating to its members in political and temporal affairs.

I shall first discuss the question of polygamy, and it will probably tend to a better understanding of that subject if I shall begin by stating some facts and pointing out some distinctions well enough understood in Utah, but which are often lost sight of elsewhere.

Until 1862, although polygamy had been openly practiced in the Territory for twelve or fourteen years before and had been openly proclaimed by the president of the church ten years be-fore, there was no law, either Federal or Territorial, upon the So far as penal consequences were concerned, polygsubject. amy in Utah was just as lawful as monogamy, because while it may be true, as some have contended and about which I do not express any opinion myself, that bigamy or polygamy was a crime at common law, there are no common-law crimes against the United States, and from the Mexican treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848 until the admission of the State in 1896 the Territory of Utah was under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of the United States.

In 1862 a law was passed defining and providing for the punishment of the crime of bigamy. It will thus be seen that for a period of at least ten years Congress and the Government acquiesced in this practice with positive and official knowledge of the fact. In 1850 Capt. Howard Stansbury, having been directed by the Government to do so, went to Utah for the purpose of making a survey and reconnoissance of that then little-known section. He spent something like a year among the Mormon people, making a rather close study of their social and religious institutions. Early in 1852 he made a report, in the course of which he called the attention of the Government to the fact that polygamy was being openly practiced in that Territory.

In 1852 the president of the church, in a great public meeting held in the Salt Lake tabernacle, openly proclaimed to the world that polygamy was a doctrine and a practice of the church. Yet, not only did the Government fail to do anything in the way of suppressing that practice, but Brigham Young was actually appointed governor and reappointed governor of that Territory by the President of the United States once before and once after he had made this public proclamation.

The law was passed in 1862, but it remained practically a dead letter upon the statute books. Substantially nothing was done in the way of enforcing it. Personally I have always regarded that as being a distinct misfortune, because I believe that had the Government at once and vigorously enforced the law and supplemented it by such legislation as might have been found necessary we would not be here to-day discussing this question. Polygamy would long since have ceased to be anything but an unpleasant memory.

There was never a prosecution at all under the law until fourteen years after it was passed. In 1876 a prosecution was instituted against one George Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds himself furnished the testimony necessary to bring about his own conviction, contenting himself by defending upon the sole ground that the law was invalid and unconstitutional, as being an interference with his mode of religious worship. He was convicted, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of the United That tribunal very promptly held that his position was untenable and that the law was valid and constitutional-a holding which it is a little difficult to understand how anybody could have expected would be otherwise. There were probably one or two other prosecutions under the law.

In 1882 Congress passed the so-called "Edmunds law," which, in addition to reenacting the provisions of the law of 1862 on the subject of polygamy, defined and provided for the punishment of the crime of polygamous cohabitation. By section 6 of that act the President was authorized to grant amnesty to offenders under the law upon such terms and conditions as he might see fit to prescribe. By section 7 of the act, children born of these polygamous marriages—and Congress was careful to say in the legislation "Mormon marriages or marriages performed according to the ceremonies of the Mormon sect "—prior to the passage of the law and for some definite period afterwards were legitimated.

In 1884, about two years after the passage of the Edmunds law, prosecutions under it began in earnest, and so vigorously was it enforced—more than 2,000 persons in Utah being convicted and sent to prison—and so strong became the pressure, not only from without, but from within the church, that in the comparatively short space of six years the church issued its famous manifesto forbidding polygamy for the future, which manifesto was subsequently ratified by the Mormon people in conference assembled.

In 1891, following this manifesto, the pro-church or so-called people's party" was disbanded and political parties were organized throughout the State upon national political lines.

In 1896 the Territory was admitted on a footing of equality with the other States of the Union. By the enabling act, which was adopted by Congress in 1894, it was provided that the constitution of the new State by an irrevocable ordinance should provide "that there shall be perfect toleration of religious sentiment; that no inhabitant of the said State shall ever be molested in person or in property on account of his or her mode of religious worship, provided that polygamous or plural mar-riages are forever prohibited." This provision of the enabling act, to my mind, is significant in two respects.

In the first place, it will be observed that the prohibition of polygamous or plural marriages is in the form of a proviso to the paragraph or section which guarantees perfect toleration of religious sentiment and noninterference with the mode of religious worship. The office of a proviso is perfectly well under-stood and settled. It has the effect to carve out of the main provision to which it is a proviso an exception which but for the proviso might be held to be included within the terms of the paragraph or section to which it is attached. Ordinarily a proviso is to be strictly construed. Ordinarily it is to be construed with strict reference to the subject-matter of the paragraph to which it is attached.

Congress knew when this enabling act was adopted, as the country knew, that the Mormon people, who would constitute the majority of the inhabitants of the new State, had for many years insisted and stubbornly contended that polygamy was a part of their religious faith, and that any interference with the practice of polygamy was an interference with their mode of religious worship.

Congress desired to guarantee, or rather to permit the people of the State to guarantee to themselves, by their fundamental law, perfect toleration of religious sentiment and noninterference with the mode of religious worship; but Congress also desired that that guaranty should never be construed so as to include polygamous marriages in the future. It was therefore as though Congress had said: "You may theorize as you please; you may believe as you please; you may assert such opinions as you please upon the subject of polygamy; but you shall not practice it."

I speak of this because it has been said that some of the Mormon people, some of the leaders, still believe and still assert a belief in polygamy. Whatever we may have to say about the good taste or the propriety or the wrongfulness of that kind of a belief or that kind of an assertion (and I have as positive opinions about that as anybody here), they are within their rights in believing it and in asserting the belief, if they choose to do so. The only thing this enabling act or this compact made between the Government of the United States and the State inhibits is the practice of polygamy.

And so no man can be punished and no man can be deprived of a right because he may believe or because he may assert a belief, or the people or some of the people with whom he may be associated may believe or assert a belief in the abstract rightfulness of polygamy. He can only be held responsible for what he does or at most for what they do in that respect.

In another respect this language is significant. It is "provided that polygamous or plural marriages"—not polygamous cohabitation—"are forever prohibited." When that language was adopted by Congress, Congress knew, as the people of the State knew, and as the people of the country who had paid any attention to the subject knew, that there was a difference between polygamy and polygamous cohabitation.

A man committed the crime of polygamy when, having a wife living and undivorced, he went through the ceremony of marriage with another woman. He committed the crime of unlawful cohabitation or polygamous cohabitation when, having previously married two or more wives, he continued to live with them in the habit and repute of marriage.

At the time the enabling act was adopted there were more than 2,000 polygamous households in the State of Utah, 2,000 men whose status as polygamists had already been fixed and established. Congress must have known that under a law simply prohibiting polygamy every one of those men might have returned to living with his wives, and not a single one of the could be punished. Under a constitutional provision simply declaring that polygamous marriages should be prohibited not one of those men could be interfered with. It required something else in addition. But understanding that, Congress deliberately omitted from this provision any requirement whatever upon the subject of polygamous cohabitation, contenting itself with putting into the enabling act a requirement simply that polygamy or polygamous marriages should be prohibited.

So if the legislature of the State of Utah, immediately after the State came in, had seen fit to pass a law legalizing every one of these existing polygamous marriages, I do not well see how it could have been charged that in doing so they were violating the compact made between the United States and the Territory of Utah, whatever might have been said as to the wrongfulness, and I think a great deal might well have been said against the rightfulness of that kind of legislation. It is sufficient, however, to say that the legislature of Utah never attempted to do that, but, on the contrary, not only adopted the previous provision of the law with reference to polygamy, but also incorporated in the statutes of Utah, where it remains to this day, a provision prohibiting polygamous cohabitation and kindred offenses as well.

Mr. President, in this rather brief review that I have given of this situation it will be seen that Congress in dealing with this question has dealt with it in its social rather than in its criminal aspect. The object of Congress seems to have been to get rid of the institution of polygamy rather than to punish individuals who were guilty of the practice. In other words, the desire was not so much to punish the sinner as it was to eradicate the sin. This is borne out by a variety of considerations. I will not stop to mention more than a few of them

In the first place, the penalties of the Edmunds law are visited upon the husband only. The plural wife is not made guilty of any offense whatever.

In the second place, children that were born of these polygamous marriages, these "Mormon marriages," prior to the passage of the law and for a definite period thereafter are legitimated.

In the third place, the President is authorized to grant amnesty to offenders against this particular law on such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, and in granting amnesty either to individuals or to classes the condition which he did prescribe was that they should refrain from violating the law in the future.

In the fourth place, in the administration of the law in the courts, whenever a man was brought before a judge for sentence it was the invariable custom and practice to inquire of him whether he would promise to obey the law in the future. If he gave the promise, he was permitted to go invariably without any punishment at all. If he declined to give the promise, almost invariably the full penalty of the law, both as to fine and imprisonment, was visited upon him.

Mr. President, this was also the feeling of the people of that State. The thing which we demanded—and I say "we" because I was one of them from the time I was old enough to have any opinion on the subject at all—the thing which we demanded was that the institution of polygamy, the system of polygamy, should be abandoned, and the punishment of the offender was of secondary importance. It was adopted, I might say, rather as a means to the end of getting rid of the system than as the end itself.

And so when the church issued this manifesto forbidding polygamy in the future and the people ratified the manifesto, and it was believed by the Gentile people in that State that it was issued in good faith and that future plural marriages would no longer occur, there was a pretty general disposition to overlook a good many things in the conduct of those who were already in this relation.

It is a pretty difficult thing for people to understand—there are a great many people in this world who are unable to understand—how any pure-minded person can conscientiously believe in the doctrine of polygamy. It is contrary to their teaching and training, as it is to mine. It is contrary to their fixed, to their instinctive feelings and opinions, as it is to mine. And yet there is absolutely no doubt that the people who entered into this relationship did so believing in its rightfulness, and not only that, but believing that it was ordained by the Almighty Himself. They were as sincere in their belief in its rightfulness as I was sincere in my belief in its wrongfulness.

Mr. President, an erroneous religious idea is the most difficult thing in the world to combat. It submits to no rule of logic. It fits into no syllogistic form. It is major and minor premise and conclusion rolled into one dogmatic declaration—"thus saith the Lord."

Civilization from the beginning of history has been covered with the crazy patchwork of the unreasoning foibles of theology. A thousand years ago Peter the Hermit set all Europe in a blaze of religious fervor with the demand that the Holy Sepulchre should be wrested from infidel hands. The mad crusades which followed resulted in immeasurable suffering and in the loss of hundreds of thousands of lives, Christian as well as infidel. Carrying aloft the banner of the cross of that Christ whose very birth signalized "peace on earth, good will toward men," and whose imperative command was "love your enemies," the Christian armies of the crusades threw themselves with savage and bloody fury upon the Moslem world in response to an appeal to their religious passions.

Almost within the memory of our grandparents old England and New England were lashed into a superstitious frenzy over witchcraft. The belief filled a century with gloom and horror. The story of its cruelties makes a dark and sinister chapter in the otherwise magnificent history of Massachusetts. If some poor woman, borne down by poverty, filled by a sense of injustice, walked the path of life apart; if some child, undersized, crippled, deformed, exhibited unusual precocity of mind, at once the finger of public suspicion was pointed and the horrifying cry of witchcraft was raised.

As late as 1768, less than one hundred and forty years ago, within the memory of some men living at the time the Mormon Church was organized, John Wesley solemnly declared that the giving up of the belief in witchcraft was in effect the giving up of the Bible. From that time, Mr. President, when the King of Moab, besieged by the armies of Israel, offered his eldest son, that should have reigned in his stead, as a burnt offering upon the walls of the city-from that far day when the Hindoo mother, stifling the earliest as well as the holiest and strongest passion of the human heart, consigned to the sacred waters of the Ganges the loved child of her body in obedience to a religious delusionto this hour of enlightenment and civilization, the melancholy fact runs through all history that nothing has been too absurd, nothing too cruel, to be believed and taught and done in the name of religion. And even in our own day, at the very noon time of sane and rational thought, a score of illogical religious fads have their thousands of fatuous adherents.

So I say, Mr. President, that you can not reason with a false religious belief any more than you can argue with a case of typhoid fever. It simply runs its course and mental health returns, not when the intellect has been convinced by the appeal of reason, but when by the process of time and by the slow attrition of opposing thought the intellect has so far changed that the false belief no longer appeals to it. So the fact that polygamy has been opposed to practically the unanimous thought of the American people—has been opposed to the almost unani-mous thought of the Christian world—is no argument whatever that the people who practiced it and taught it did not believe sincerely in its rightfulness.

Mr. President, polygamy having been abandoned by this manifesto, and there being in the State of Utah this large number of polygamous households, these men whose status had already been fixed, the question at once arose what was the wise thing to do about it, and the feeling which was entertained by the Gentiles generally, while they did not approve, while they would have infinitely preferred that it should have been otherwise, nevertheless the feeling was that, all things considered, the wisest and best thing was to see as little of it as possible, to let those people live out their lives, and thus get through with it. This is practically the unanimous testimony in this record. For example, I call attention to the testimony of two witnesses on the part of the protestants. Mr. Critchlow, who prepared this protest and who was the principal witness against Senator Smoot in the hearings upon that subject, testified as follows:

ness against Senator Smoot in the hearings upon that subject, testified as follows:

Mr. Van Cott. Mr. Critchlow, is it not the fact that the general feeling in Utah, among non-Mormons—leaving the Mormons out of view—has been that if all plural marriages had ceased since the manifesto, these relations of unlawful cohabitation they were practically willing to close their eyes to?

Mr. Cattchlow: I think so, except in cases where they were really absolutely offensive, or where they occurred in such a manner as to be really examples to the people. Amongst the higher officials, and even with them, I think it would be fair to say that people were inclined to minimize these things as much as possible for the peace of the State and the community and for its upbuilding, and to remove the reproach of it before the country.

Mr. Van Cott. Now, as to John Henry Smith, the fact that a child was born to one of his plural wives during the time of the constitutional convention, non-Mormons, as a general rule, were disposed to overlook if they felt satisfied that there were no more plural marriages?

Mr. Cattchlow. Yes, sir; I think so, and felt that the thing would work itself out in the future.

Mr. Van Cott. Now, the other matter that you spoke of—this offensive flaunting. I wish you would give to the committee a little more in detail what you understand by that, and I call your attention now to the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States where it has quoted that particular phrase.

Mr. Cattchlow. What would be offensive to one person of course might not be to another. If a man had a polygamous wife and family right by my door side, and his children associated with mine, and he visited a half or a third of his time there and a half or a third of his time somewhere else, and it was placed there under my face, it might be offensive to me, while to you or to somebody else, living in another part of the town, it might not be offensive and a half or a third of his time somewhere a man takes two sisters under the fected.

Mr. Van Cott. But where the polygamists have had their wives living in separate houses, and have simply kept up the old relations without an offensive flaunting before the public of the relations, it has been practically passed over, has it not?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; as a matter of fact it has been. A

Mr. Van Cott. Is not this the fact also, that you did not deem yourself as being lowered in the community in any way when you went on the stump with John Henry Smith?

Mr. Cattchlow. I certainly did not, or I should not have gone.

Mr. Van Cott. No; I mean that was the general feeling with the non-Mormons?

Mr. Cattchlow. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. Van Cott. And in the questions I have put to you, you understand that I do not mean to say that you belittled yourself or that you lowered yourself in any way by doing those things. You did not consider it so?

Mr. Cattchlow. I did not.

Then Mr. Critchlow goes on and says:

Mr. Cetterlow goes on and says:

Mr. Cetterlow. I think that in all probability, as near as I can get at my state of mind at that time, it was, that very shortly after the manifesto, under the conditions that existed and that we thought were going to exist, there was no inclination on the part of the prosecuting officers to push these matters as to present cohabitation—I think that is so—thinking it was a matter that would immediately die out.

Mr. Van Cott. John Henry Smith was there?

Mr. Cattellow. I think so.

Mr. Van Cott. It was well known that he was living in unlawful cohabitation?

Mr. Cattellow. That was our understanding of the cohabitation?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. That was our understanding of it.
Mr. VAN COTT. So well known was this, was it not, to non-Mormons there generally, that where they knew that a prominent Mormon was living in unlawful cohabitation they made no objection to it in the way of protesting to the officers? Is not that true?

Mr. CRITCHLOW. Do you mean the non-Mormons generally?
Mr. VAN COTT. I mean the non-Mormons generally.
Mr. CRITCHLOW. I think that is true.
Mr. VAN COTT. They were disposed to let things go?

Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; I think so.
Mr. Van Cott. That was the general feeling?
Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; I think so.
Senator Overman. When was that?
Mr. Critchlow. During the time of the manifesto, in September, 1890, on down to very recent times; pretty nearly up to date, or practically up to date. Perhaps even now, if I was going to say what was the general inclination—
Senator Overman. The general inclination in Utah is not to prosecute Mr. Smith?
Mr. Critchlow. The general inclination in Utah is not to prosecute Mr. Smith.
Senator Beveringe. Then what more have you to say on that point as showing the great popular indignation?
Mr. Critchlow. There is no inclination on the part of the non-Mormons, and I suppose the Senator refers to non-Mormons, rather than to Mormons—there is no sentiment there in Utah, no great amount of sentiment there in Utah, that would favor putting Joseph F. Smith in the attitude of being persecuted for his religion.
Mr. Van Cott. You speak of the general disinclination to prosecute Mr. Smith at the present time. That is true generally of polygamists who were such before the manifesto, is it not?
Mr. Critchlow. Yes, sir; it is so.
I have extracts from the testimony of some twelve or fifteen

I have extracts from the testimony of some twelve or fifteen other witnesses, perhaps thirty, who all testified about it. These extracts are from the testimony of Gentile witnesses, all substantially testifying to the same thing with reference to this matter. I will ask, Mr. President, to incorporate those extracts in my remarks, without stopping to read them now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

The extracts referred to are as follows:

Judge O. W. Powers, a Gentile Democrat, and one of the principal witnesses against Senator Smoot, testified as follows:

cipal witnesses against Senator Smoot, testified as follows:

The Chairman. Will you state why it is that those who live in polygamous cohabitation to-day are not prosecuted?

Mr. Powers. I will do so as well as I can, and I simply state here the views, as I know them, of what are termed the "old guard" of the Liberal party, Republicans and Democrats, who fought the church party in the days when it was a power. Those men have felt, and still feel, that if the church will only stop new plural marriages and will allow this matter to die out and pass away, they will not interfere with them. First of all, of course, we want peace in Utah. We would like to be like the rest of the country. We want to make of it a State like the States of the rest-of the Union. We want the Mormon people to be like the rest of the American people; but we realize that there is a condition there which the people of the East do not—and, I presume, can not—understand. You can not make people who have been brought up under our system of government and our system of marriage believe that folks can sincerely and honestly believe that it is right to have more than one wife, and yet those people believe it. They are a God-fearing people, and it has been a part of their faith and their life.

Now, to the eastern people their manner of living is looked upon as importal.

Now, to the eastern people their manner of living is looked upon as immoral. Of course it is, viewed from their standpoint. Viewed from the standpoint of a Mormon it is not. The Mormon wives are as sincere in their belief in polygamy as the Mormon men, and they have no more hesitation in declaring that they are one of several wives of a man than a good woman in the East has in declaring that she is the single wife of a man. There is that condition. There are those people.

single wife of a man. There is that condition. There are those people—

Senator Hopkins. Do you mean to say that a Mormon woman will as readily become a plural wife as she would a first wife?

Mr. Powers. Those who are sincere in the Mormon faith—who are good Mormons, so called—I think would just as readily become plural wives (that has been my experience) as they would become the first wife. That condition exists, There is a question for statesmen to solve. We have not known what was best to do. It has been discussed, and people would say that such and such a man ought to be prosecuted. Then they would consider whether anything would be gained; whether we would not delay instead of hastening the time that we hope to live to see; whether the institution would not flourish by reason of what they would term persecution. And so, notwith-standing a protest has been sent down here to you, I will say to you the people have acquiesced in the condition that exists.

Mr. Van Cott. You mean the Gentiles?

Mr. POWERS. Yes; the Gentiles.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any knowledge of the extent to which polygamous cohabitation exists in the State to-day?

Mr. POWERS. I have tried not to know about it. When it has come under my immediate observation I have known about it. I do not know to what extent it exists. I want to see it pass away.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it exist outside of the city of Salt Lake?

Mr. POWERS. No; I could not give an idea as to the extent, because, as I tell you, I have honestly tried not to know about it.

Mr. McConnell, formerly governor of the State of Idaho, testified that the foregoing extracts from the testimoy of Mr. Critchlow and Judge Powers also expressed the state of feeling.

tified that the foregoing extracts from the testinoy of Mr. Critchlow and Judge Powers also expressed the state of feeling in Idaho.

Mr. Holzheimer, also a Gentile resident of the State of Idaho, testified as follows:

Mr. Holzheimer. At the time the manifesto was issued and up to that time the question of polygamy had caused considerable agitation. It brought about a very peculiar state of affairs, because the rank and file of the Mormon people had been taught that polygamy was right, and many of them believed it was right; and it left a condition of affairs after the issuance of the manifesto—family affairs—that was an anomaly, to say the least, and the question of how to handle and take care of the problem was one which confronted the people of that State, and I do not believe they ever did really solve the problem. It was a very difficult one, as to what should be done for the best interests of all concerned.

The consensus of opinion at that time was that those who had contracted marriages prior to the manifesto should be left alone. It was not, however, believed that they should openly violate the law and unlawfully cohabit with their numerous wives. I will say this, that where that has occurred it has been mostly in isolated cases. There have been a number of cases where children have been born, but in no case that I know of has it been done openly. It is true it is against the law, but it has not been done in such an open, lewd manner as has been intimated, nor has it been general. And because of the peculiar state of affairs it was the opinion that the whole thing would die out; that it was only a matter of a short time when the question would be entirely settled, because there would be no new marriages. I do not know; possibly there are some. I do not know how many cases there are in Idaho—possibly twenty or thirty; maybe more.

Mr. Martin, another Contile resident of Idaho, testified:

Mr. Martin, another Gentile resident of Idaho, testified:

I wish to say for myself that I would punish, if I was doing it, those old cases. I believe they ought to be punished; but a majority of our people seem to think that the best way, as far as concerns those old fellows who contracted these relations before the manifesto, as long as they stop it and do not take any new wives, or as long as no new wives are taken, is to let it go, to let it gradually die out, to let the old ones die. the old ones die.

Mr. Brady, another Gentile resident of Idaho, testified:

Mr. Van Corr. What is the sentiment in Idaho regarding disturbing or leaving undisturbed those men who went into polygamy prior to the manifesto of 1890?

Mr. Braddy. To be absolutely frank in the matter, my judgment is that a majority of the men in Idaho would favor leaving those old men to live out their lives just as they have started in.

The following witnesses among a very large number of the Gentile residents of the State of Utah gave the following testimony. Mr. J. W. N. Whitecotton said:

mony. Mr. J. W. N. Whitecotton said:

While the people of Utah—all the Mormons; I will speak with reference to them rather than Gentiles in that regard—are sick and tired and disgusted with polygamy; they want to be rid of it; they want to wipe it out and get it under their feet; at the same time when it comes, for instance, to myself or any other person going and making complaint against a neighbor because he is living in unlawful cohabitation, it calls up to us all these things of an unpleasant character among neighbors; throwing the only support the women have into the penitentiary maybe, or taking the substance of the man to pay the fine. It makes a man hesitate, and a man who would do that must be a Javert. No other man can do it. That is what I mean by taking nerve. He must recognize nothing but the law. He must be a Javert. No other man can do it. That is what I mean by taking nerve. He must recognize nothing but the anangke of the law. Nothing else must appear. He can not take into account the surrounding circumstances and the atmosphere in which he lives.

Mr. Hyrum E. Booth testified:

Mr. Hyrum E. Booth testified:

Mr. Hyrum E. Booth testified:

Mr. Worthington, Now, I want to ask you, Mr. Booth, to explain why it is that if the people of Utah, and the Mormon people included, a large part of them, are so opposed to polygamy, how you account for what is the acknowledged fact here, that a good many of them are living in polygamous relations and are not interfered with.

Mr. Booth, Well, my explanation of that is that the principal fight of the Gentiles has been to do away with polygamous marriages. While, during many years, there were numerous prosecutions for unlawful cohabitation, it was not for the purpose of punishing, so much, those people who lived in unlawful cohabitation, as it was to bring about a cessation of polygamous marriages. That was the principal for which we strived, to stop people from marrying in polygamy. This was finally brought about in 1890 by the manifesto of the president of the church, which was affirmed, or sustained as they call it, by the conference on October 6, 1890, and again in 1891. We did not accept that in good faith at that time. That is, we were somewhat skeptical about it; but later he did. Now, there has been since that time a disinclination to prosecute men and women who live in unlawful cohabitation. One of my own reasons—the way I looked at it—was this: My sympathy was with the plural wife and her children. By these prosecutions she suffered more really than the husband did. In nearly all of the cases I may say the plural wife is a pure-minded woman, a woman who believed that it was right according to the law of God for her to accept that relation, and that she can not be released from her obligations, when they are once entered upon.

Mr. Worthington, You mean by the rule of her church?

Mr. Booth, By the rule of her church, not by law. I am looking at it from her standpoint now—that when once that relation is entered upon there is no way of divorcing her from it.

Mr. Worth, The church can, but I mean in no legal way. There is no legal way out of it. So that to enforce rigorousl matter how much you might prosecute people for unlawful constitution, it would continue.

Mr. Worthington. Mr. Booth, you say that is the way you felt about it, and the way many other Gentiles felt. What do you say as to the proportion of the people of your State who feel that way on that subject?

Mr. BOOTH. I should say, with Judge Powers and Mr. Critchlow, that the general sentiment among the Gentile people in Utah is a disinclination to prosecute those cases.

Judge William M. McCarty, who was a United States district attorney in Utah and prosecuted many of these cases and who is now chief justice of the supreme court of the State of Utah, testified:

Mr. McCarty. Well, this question was being agitated, and the air was filled with rumors that men were violating the spirit of the manifesto. Some Gentiles were insisting that prosecutions ought to follow, and, as I stated, I called a special grand jury a short time before to investigate this in connection with a few other matters; and the attitude of the press—or rather the failure of the press to assume any attitude—on the question was an indication to me that the press was against it. And, in fact, the public prosecutor, whose attention I had invited to those rumors, refused to proceed in the matter, stating that he had talked with his brother, who was then manager of the Heraid, and his brother advised him to let those cases alone; that they would soon die out; that he believed it was the best and most practical solution of the question. My reason for calling the grand jury was the refusal of the public prosecutor to proceed.

Mr. Worthington. You referred just now to something that took place subsequently which confirmed your conclusion that the general sentiment was against prosecuting for polygamous cohabitation when the parties were married before the manifesto. What was that that the parties were married before the manifesto. What was that that took place subsequently?

Mr. McCart. Well, those parties, so it was rumored, continued to live in those relations, and then I got expressions from some of the leading Gentiles of the State, some of whom were Republicans and some of whom were Democrats, that the most practical solution of the question was to let these old men die off and not molest them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It appears here that Senator SMOOT became an apostle of the Mormon Church in April, 1900. I understand, then, from what you have said, that at that time that was the status of opinion in Utah, the body of the people, Mormons and non-Mormons, that these people who were married before the manifesto ought not to be interfered with, although they were continuing to live together?

Mr. McCart. Mr. Worthington, there have been a few who insisted on a vigorous enforcement of this law. Some have been decidedly against it, but the consensus of opinion has been that the better way was to close our eyes to what was going on and let the matter die out.

Mr. Glen Miller, former United States marshal, testified as

Mr. Van Cott. Now, in your knowledge of the State and in traveling over the State and everything of that kind, I wish you would state what the sentiment is among the Mormons in regard to new polygamous marriages; that is, since the manifesto.

Mr. Miller. The general impression has been, both among the Mormons and Gentiles, that there have been no polygamous marriages sanctioned by the church.

Mr. Van Cott. I wish to know particularly the sentiment in regard to whether it is in favor of polygamy or against it.

Mr. Van Cott. What is your opinion as to whether a sentiment of that kind existed against polygamy in the Mormon Church before the manifesto?

Mr. Miller. Yes, sir; it did. I know that.

Mr. Van Cott. And also as to whether the church could restore the practice of polygamy if it should so attempt.

Mr. Miller. I do not believe it would be possible to ever restore polygamy in the State of Utah.

Mr. Van Cott. Do you know by repute of men living in unlawful cohabitation?

Mr. Miller. I do.

Mr. Miller. I do.

Mr. Miller. I do.

conabitation?

Mr. Miller. I do.
Mr. Van Cott. What is the sentiment of Gentiles in regard to complaining or informing in regard to such matters?

Mr. Miller. Well, there has been a sentiment against that, as there has been against any informing against any of the infractions of law generally. They felt that it was only a question of time that the practice would die out through the death of those who practiced it, and the removal of that generation. It was getting less and less all the time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Considering this testimony, Mr. President, it must be seen that this situation, which confronted us out in Utah after the manifesto was issued, was one which bristled with difficulties, was one which must be approached from the standpoint of practical statesmanship rather than from the standpoint of the religious reformer. Those men and women who entered into these marriages were not inspired by lust. They were good men; they were pure women. Any man who has lived in the State of Utah, who has mingled with them in their daily life, who has sat at their firesides, and who has talked with them must admit that this is a fact.

Mr. President, that is the crux of this whole situation. man who attempts to judge of the existing conditions without that fact before him will inevitably not judge with justice. If it had been the ordinary case of meretricious living, there would have been no difficulty in dealing with it; but it was not. It was a case where these people had entered into these relations believing the relations were just as pure as the relations existing between a man and his one wife. In the ordinary affairs of life they are good citizens, law-abiding citizens, self-respecting members of the community, and we felt, when the church issued that manifesto forbidding the practice for the future, that the time had come when we could afford to bear with the situation with some degree of patience until it finally worked itself out; in other words, we felt that we could afford to cover this remaining remnant of a passing generation with the mantle of charity (which covers a multitude of sins) until, in the course of a few years, they should be covered with the everlasting mantle of the grave. So much for the old cases of polygamy.

But it has been claimed that since the manifesto there have been instances of polygamous marriages. Of course I have not the means of knowing how many such cases there may have been, but I would not be honest with myself nor candid with the Senate if I did not say that, in my judgment, there have been some cases of that character. So far as those cases are concerned, no word of justification or excuse or toleration can, in my judgment, be uttered by any honest man either in this country or out of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Were those marriages in this country or out of it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will discuss the question of where those marriages took place in a moment. Of course, as I say, I do not know how many such cases there may have been, but the testimony is to the effect that they have been somewhat limited. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] called attention to the testimony the other day, and I have a reference to the same, that there has not been to exceed twenty cases since the manifesto was issued in 1890 in Utah; and it appears that in those cases, so far as anything appears on the subject at all, the marriages were celebrated somewhere else-in Mexico, in Canada, or somewhere out of the jurisdiction of the United States.

One Charles Mostyn Owen, who has seemed to be a sort of master of ceremonies in this whole investigation, who for many years has been conducting an investigation into this subject, and who tells the committee that he has visited personally from time to time practically every Mormon settlement in Utah and most of the settlements in Idaho and Wyoming, that he has agents practically in every settlement in those three States, gives us a list of eleven men whom he thinks have entered into polygamy since the manifesto. I think later in his testimony he gives one or two others, and there is some testimony which indicates that there are some additional ones, which brings the total number up to about, as I say, twenty. In this list of twenty there are the names of five apostles. Those apostles are Mr. Teasdale, Mr. Abraham H. Cannon, Mr. Merrill, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Cowley.

As to Mr. Teasdale, the testimony shows that he married his wife under such circumstances as would render the marriage absolutely void. It was afterwards declared by a court of competent jurisdiction by a decree to be void. So that it seems to me, when we come to consider the entire record, his case should be laid out of consideration.

With reference to Apostle Merrill, the charge was made against him while he was lying upon what afterwards proved to be his deathbed, but before he died he made an affidavit, which was sworn to, in which he positively denied this charge and said it was utterly false, and that he had not married any wife at all since the manifesto. I believe what Mr. Merrill said about that. The testimony to the contrary was only in the nature of hearsay and rumor.

With reference to Abraham H. Cannon-Abraham H. Cannon was an apostle and married a plural wife in 1896. He died within thirty days after that marriage-I think it was twenty His legal wife was a witness before the committee, and she said that upon his deathbed he asked her forgiveness, and that, in her judgment-he was a conscientious man, she saidthe fact that he had violated the law and violated the mandate of the church preyed upon his mind so that it worried him into his grave. What would have happened to Mr. Cannon if he had lived, of course, we do not know. He died, as I say, within a comparatively short period.

That leaves two of the apostles; and with reference to those two, if we were to consider the testimony in this record alone, I think no judge would probably hold it was sufficient to warrant a verdict of conviction by a jury. Still I have absolutely no doubt in my own mind that both those apostles have taken plural wives since the manifesto, and I think there are no words in the English language that are sufficiently severe with which to condemn their conduct.

It appears, however, that when the attention of Senator SMOOT was called to the testimony before the Senate committee, he preferred charges against those apostles to the first presidency of the church and demanded an investigation. vestigation was had, and it resulted in the removal of those two men from their offices, and they are to-day fugitives from justice in a foreign jurisdiction.

As to the character of these cases, Judge Powers, one of the witnesses for the protestants, testified that they were sporadic in character. I will not stop to read the testimony, but I will incorporate it in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senator McComas. Have there been many polygamous marriages lately? Of course polygamous marriages are forbidden, and it is difficult to ascertain whether there have been.

Mr. POWERS. If there are any polygamous marriages at the present time, my opinion is they are sporadic cases.

Judge McCarty, a Gentile and chief justice of the supreme bench of the State, testified to substantially the same thing, that there were only about a dozen or so of such cases. He further testified that it was his opinion that when the manifesto came there would be fanatics in the church whom no law and no church rule could keep from engaging in this kind of offense, and he expected there would be an occasional case of this character. Judge McCarty testified that the people who had violated the law in that respect were fugitives from justice.

Mr. Worthington. What town is that to which you refer?
Mr. McCarty. That is Monroe.
Mr. Worthington. So that there polygamy is practically extinct?
Mr. McCarty. Yes; and what can be said of Monroe can be said of most other towns in the State.
Mr. Worthington. Most other towns in the State?
Mr. McCarty. Yes.
Mr. Worthington. You think the increase [decrease], as you say, has been phonoment.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You think the increase [decrease], as you say, has been phenomenal?

Mr. McCarty. It is only a matter of a short time until it will disappear, provided there are no new marriages.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what I was going to ask you about. From your knowledge—and when I speak of knowledge I mean that gained by general reputation—what is the fact as to whether there are new plural marriages in any considerable degree?

Mr. McCarty. It is rumored that there have been a few—some few, a dozen or more.

a dozen or more.

a dozen or more.

Mr. Worthington. As a general thing they are comparatively few—the rumors of recent plural marriages?

Mr. McCarty. Yes; very few. The people contracting them are keeping pretty well under cover.

Mr. Worthington. Are they not as a general thing out of the State?

Mr. McCarty. Yes; they are out of the State.

Mr. Worthington. Fugitives from justice?

Mr. McCarty. In Alberta, Canada, or down in Mexico.

My view is this: Knowing and having lived in a Mormon community all my life; having associated with them and worked with them—in fact, it was the only community that I had associated with, with the exception that there were a few Gentiles interspersed throughout the entire State—I knew there were a great many fanatics on this question of polygamy, and I believed that some of them would still hold out, no matter what the heads of the church would say or do, and that they would insist upon living, as they termed it, their religion, and that there would probably be occasionally a case of polygamy. That was the way I regarded the situation, and, as I have already suggested, that there would be an occasional violation of the law against unlawful cohabitation and occasionally a child born.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I say, the anostles who

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I say, the apostles who were guilty of this thing were removed from their offices in the church, and they are to-day fugitives from justice beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. When that action of the church was taken the Salt Lake Herald, a Gentile newspaper published at Salt Lake, which has always been opposed to the practice of polygamy, had the following editorial upon the subject:

A STEP FORWARD.

A STEP FORWARD.

One of the most notable of the Mormon Church conferences concluded its session on Sunday with the resignation of two apostles and the appointment of three new members of the quorum. Most significant of the conference acts was the retirement of Apostles Cowley and Taylor, who have been conspicuous in the public eye by their evasion of the summons to testify before the Smoor committee of the Senate. Their retirement is significant because it is accepted as an evidence that the church authorities were dissastisfied with their failure to appear before the committee as well as with their disobedience of the manifesto of President Woodruff which forbade church members to take plural wives or perform plural marriages.

While no detailed explanation of the abdication is made, these are the reasons generally accepted as the basis of the official announcement that Cowley and Taylor were "out of harmony" with their quorum. Although the critics of the church will not concede any good motive in the action of the authorities, there is no doubt but that the discipline of the two recalcitrant apostles will be taken by the country generally as an evidence of good faith and a desire to enforce the laws of the church against further polygamous marriages. Whether their retirement was meant to influence the decision in the case of Senator Smoor, as his opponents affect to believe, or whether it was a matter of church discipline alone, it must produce a favorable impression throughout the country as well as here in Utah, where the public is familiar with the circumstances leading up to the climax.

That the action is approved by members and nonmembers of the church here goes without saying. Messrs. Cowley and Taylor were charged with what amounted to flagrant defiance of civil and church laws since the manifesto. They were wanted as witnesses before the Senate, but choose to evade service and thus defy the Federal authorities. That they have been disciplined ought to be sufficient proof that the church maps take sho

Mr. President, every one of these men who has taken a plural wife since the manifesto, in addition to being a violator of the law, is an enemy of his own people, who has done them a more grievous wrong than any open and avowed opponent could possibly do, because he has set them in a false light before the country and compelled every one of them, in the eyes of a large portion of the American people, to share the shame of his lawlessness. Such a man has not only broken the law of the land and the law of the church, but he has broken his own pledges, if not expressly, at least impliedly, and none the less solemnly given to the nation. As I say, there can be no word of toleration uttered for that kind of an individual. If I had my way, every one of them would be in jail serving out the extreme penalty of the law; and, Mr. President, in my deliberate judgment, that is the feeling and the sentiment of the vast majority of the Mormon people themselves. The Mormon people are opposed to polygamy being restored. The Mormon people themselves are opposed to these violations of law. a number of extracts from the testimony upon that subject, and, with the permission of the Senate, I will incorporate them in my remarks without stopping to read them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

Mr. Booth, already referred to, testified as follows:

I wish to say in that connection that I have among my acquaintances many prominent young Mormons, politicians and others, about my age and younger, and I have heard many of them say, with great emphasis, that if they believed the church sanctioned any plural marriages since the manifesto, they would leave the church immediately: that they would not continue as members of the church if the manifesto should be violated by the officers of the church. I believe them to be just as sincere as men can be sincere.

Mr. J. C. Lynch, a resident of Salt Lake City, also a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. What is your opinion as to the sentiment among young Mormons with respect to the perpetuation of polygamy?
Mr. LYNCH. Their opinion is that they want to do away with it.

Mr. A. A. Noon, a Gentile resident of Provo, said:

Mr. Noon. The young people that I talked with, and my family, and we talk occasionally, and most of my family—our daughters, and they are around amongst the young women more or less—from my knowledge and information and impressions, gained from remarks casually now and again, they do not indorse anything of the kind. They are glad to get rid of it. They consider it an incubus. They are glad it has gone.

Mr. John P. Meakin, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. John P. Meakin, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Worthington. What have you ascertained as to the feeling of the Mormon people on the subject of polygamy of late years?

Mr. Meakin. Well, I have entered into conversation very much with the people, and I find that they are all very pleased that polygamy is a thing of the past; and they welcome the emancipation from the system. I speak not only for the young Mormons, but for the middleaged. It is a matter of general pleasure, or rejoicing, that it is being obliterated.

Mr. Worthington. What would you think, from your knowledge, obtained in this way, would be the effect if the president of the church should undertake now to promulgate a new revelation, reestablishing polygamy in Utah?

Mr. Meakin. Knowing the men, I think it is rather a question that is not supposable; but I do not believe that the people of Utah would stand for it a minute.

Mr. Worthington. I speak of the Mormon people. Is that what you mean?

Mr. Meakin. I am speaking of the Mormon people.

Mr. Cole, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. In going over Boxelder County, and from what you know there since you have been in office, I will ask you whether, in your opinion, the sentiment is for polygamy or against it?

Mr. Cole. Oh, it is against it, decidedly. Everywhere that I have ever been, or anything I have ever heard spoken of, it is certainly ever been, or anything I have ever heard spoken of, it is certainly against polygamy.

Mr. Van Cott. How is it with the younger element—the younger generation?

Mr. Cole. Well, they in particular are against polygamy.

Mr. Van Cott. How is it with Mormons who are more advanced in years since the manifesto?

Mr. Cole. I have not heard that matter discussed very much. I do not know that there are any persons there—I never heard a person express himself in favor of polygamy since I have been in Utah.

Judge James A. Miner, former supreme court judge and a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Worthington. What have you observed as to the feeling of the Mormons themselves as to this subject of polygamy?

Mr. Miner. The younger class of Mormons are, I think, very much opposed to it.

Mr. Worthington. Do you find that to be well-nigh universal among them?

Mr. Miner. I think it is.

Mr. Worthington. What would you say would be the future of polygamy in that respect, without reference to any law on that subject?

Mr. Miner. I think in time, when these old people who are now in polygamy die off, it will entirely end. That has been my hope.

I have noticed another thing. Since the manifesto we have had Mormon jurors. Before that we had no Mormon jurors. The marshals would select Gentiles to the exclusion of Mormons. But after the manifesto we commenced having Mormon jurors instead of all Gentiles, and I found that in many cases a Mormon jury would convict anyone for adultery or unlawful cohabitation quite as well as a Gentile—that is, the feeling kept growing in that direction. And so far as the violation of the marital obligation is concerned, the Mormon people would convict a man who broke it as readily as a Gentile, and I think more so. They seem to have a feeling against Mormons who would violate that obligation, and I think among that class of young people there is more virtue than among almost any other class.

Elias A. Smith, bank cashier and business man, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. Calling attention to any rumors that you may have heard regarding alleged plural marriages since the manifesto, I should like to know what is your position, and the position generally taken by the young Mormons on that question, and by all the Mormons on that question

Mr. SMITH. The position of the members of the Mormon Church is that it is in violation of the spirit of the manifesto and contrary to the law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is?

Mr. Worthington. Having plural wives.
Mr. Smith. Taking plural wives; and I have yet to talk with a Mormon who approves of it; and in every instance where I have talked with them it has been disapproved of in very strong terms.

Maj. Richard W. Young, a Mormon, and prominent in social and business circles, testified as follows:

and business circles, testified as follows:

Mr. Van Cott. What is the sentiment of the Mormon people regarding the entering into polygamy since the manifesto?

Mr. Young. It is decidedly hostile.

Mr. Van Cott. What would you say as to whether the mere issuance of the manifesto created a sentiment against polygamy, or whether the manifesto was the mere expression of a sentiment already existing in Utah?

Mr. Young. I should say that it was the result both of a sentiment and the creation of a sentiment—an additional sentiment.

Mr. Van Cott. What are your own views 2s to whether it is right to practice polygamy, since the manifesto?

Mr. Young. I believe it is not right.

Mr. Charles Do. Moisy a Gentile and a former resident of Mr. Charles De Moisy, a Gentile and a former resident of Provo, Utah, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. What is the sentiment among the Mormons as to new polygamous marriages since the manifesto, and what is the sentiment also of the younger Mormons as to polygamy?

Mr. DE Moisy. I think there is a growing sentiment—I have noticed it for some time—not only among the younger, but among a good many other Mormons, that they are opposed to the practice of polygamy; not only opposed to the marriage, but opposed to the unlawful cohabitation.

Mr. John W. Hughes, a newspaper man of wide experience in Utah, also a Gentile, testified as follows:

Mr. Hughes. The Mormon people generally are as much against new polygamous marriages as the Gentiles, I believe as a rule, especially the younger Mormons that I meet. I meet a good many of the younger Mormons, and they are absolutely against it. They would not tolerate it.

Mrs. W. H. Jones, a resident of Salt Lake City, testified:

Mrs. Jones. I have talked to a great many. I have traveled over the State a great deal with my husband in his business and in our outings, and I have talked with a great many, especially of the younger Mormons, on that subject. They have been very much opposed to it. In fact, some of them have said to me that they would like to be called on a jury.

The CHAIRMAN. Like to be what?

Mrs. Jones. Called on a jury, to convict a man who might be arrested for going into polygamy since the manifesto.

Mr. Frank B. Stephens, a Gentile lawyer and former city attorney of Salt Lake City, testified:

Mr. Stephens. So far as plural marriages, additional marriages, are concerned, the sentiment is unanimously against them, both Mormon and Gentile.

mon and Gentile.

The general feeling is that no punishment could be too severe to be visited either upon the solemnizing officer or the contracting parties, and it is very much more pronounced in the matter of additional marriages than it is upon unlawful cohabitation.

The reason is obvious. Unlawful cohabitation will cease when these men die, if there are no more plural marriages; but if there are more plural marriages the institution will be continuous and the situation intolerable.

Mr. VAN COTT. Is that the sentiment among the Mormons themselves in regard to it?

Mr. STEPHENS. It is. I have never heard anything but words of condemnation for one who would solemnize a plural marriage, or for a contracting party. It is regarded as the grossest breach of good faith. faith.

Mr. Worthington. You mean since the manifesto?

Mr. Stephens. Since the manifesto.

Senator FORAKER. What is your judgment as to plural marriages? I understand you to have expressed one, but I want you to express it again.

Mr. Stephens. As to whether there will be more?
Senator Foraker. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. I think they would be just as rare as bigamy among people generally. Oh, I would not say quite as rare as that; very rare. It would be only in the case of an utter fanatic, who would perhaps impose upon the officiating officer in order to get a plural

Senator FORAKER. But there will be no trouble to prosecute in such cases?

Mr. Stephens. Not the slightest.
Senator Foraker. In cases of that kind?
Mr. Stephens. No. If I were district attorney, I would be willing to submit a case of that kind to a jury of Mormons.
Senator Foraker. To a jury of Mormons?
Mr. Stephens. I would, so far as that is concerned. I feel the sentiment is so general—that the contracting of new plural marriages is so generally execrated both by Mormons and Gentiles.

Mr. Martin, previously quoted, testified:

Mr. Worthington. From your acquaintance with the Mormon people in the State, have you learned anything as to their position in reference to this matter of polygamy—the younger people especially?

Mr. Martin. Yes; I have discussed it a good deal with them, being among them and with them in the campaign. They all expressed themselves against it—as glad that the church stopped it, and are against it.

On this subject Mr. Whitecotton testified as follows:

Mr. Van Cott. In traveling over the State, and in your acquaintance with the Mormon people, I will ask you to state what you have found to be their sentiment now in regard to the practice of polygamy—that is, I mean the contracting of new polygamous marriages?

Mr. Whitecotton. I think the decided sentiment of the Mormon people in Utah is hostile to polygamy.

All of those quoted above are Gentiles except Mr. Smith and Major Young, and all are reliable and trustworthy persons of long residence in the State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So much for polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. There have been two complaints which have been most strenuously urged by the opponents of the Mormon Church—polygamy and church interference in political affairs. I have already discussed the former, and I shall now direct the attention of the Senate to the remaining one of these propositions. That these complaints were well founded in the past I have no doubt; but the Senate is interested in knowing what the conditions are now, and we are only concerned with past conditions to the extent that they may reflect light upon the present.

When the Mormon pioneers, in 1847, went to Utah their movement possessed all the characteristics of a religious exodus. They met suffering and hardships and dangers at the hands of savage men and savage nature with a courage born of religious exaltation. The story of their pathetic march into the wilderness and of their early sufferings and hardships has few parallels in the history of pioneer struggles.

To them Brigham Young was more than the leader of their expedition. He was the new Moses pointed out by the finger of God to lead them through many perils to the promised land. With serene confidence in his God-given ability to conduct them in safety they followed him into the unknown with song and

In the beginning it is probable that they did not feel the need of a civil government at all. They were of one faith. Their religion was their main consideration. Everything else was of subordinate importance. When they established a civil government their religious leaders became the civil officers. time went on the rule of the church became more and more pronounced. The disposition of the leaders to advise, counsel, and direct, and that of the people to accept direction, counsel, and advice in all things, grew stronger and stronger as time went on. In those days the government in Utah was a virtual theocracy. There was a practical union of church and state. In this document that I have called attention to before by Captain Stansbury, at page 131, there is a somewhat graphic description of this situation, which I desire to read:

description of this situation, which I desire to read:

While, however, there are all the exterior evidences of a government strictly temporal, it can not be concealed that it is so intimately blended with the spiritual administration of the church that it would be impossible to separate the one from the other. The first civil governor under the constitution of the new State, elected by the people, was the president of the church, Brigham Young; the lleutenant-governor was his first ecclesiastical counselor, and the secretary of state his second counselor, these three individuals forming together the "presidency" of the church. The bishops of the several wards who, by virtue of their office in the church, had exercised not only a spiritual but a temporal authority over the several districts assigned to their charge, were appointed, under the civil organization, to be justices of the peace, and were supported in the discharge of their duties not only by the civil power, but by the whole spiritual authority of the church also. This intimate connection of church and state seems to pervade everything that is done. The supreme power in both being lodged in the hands of the same individuals, it is difficult to separate their two official characters and to determine whether, in one instance, they act as spiritual or merely temporal officers.

And so he proceeds. I will incorporate the rest of it, if the

And so he proceeds. I will incorporate the rest of it, if the Senate please, without reading further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

In the organization of the civil government nothing could be more natural than that, the whole people being of one faith, they should choose for functionaries to carry it into execution those to whom they had been in the habit of deferring as their inspired guides and by whom they had been led from a land of persecution into this far-off wilderness, which, under their lead, was already beginning to biossom like the rose. Hence came the insensible blending of the two authorities, the principal functionaries of the one holding the same relative positions under the other. Thus, the bishop, in case of a dispute between two members of the church, would interpose his spiritual authority as bishop for its adjustment, while in differences between those not subject to the spiritual jurisdiction and who could not be made amenable to church discipline, he would act in the magisterial capacity conferred upon him by the constitution and civil laws of the State. Thus the control of the affairs of the colony remained in the same hands, whether under church or State organization, and these hands were, in a double capacity, those into which the constituents had, whether as citizens or as church members, themselves chosen to confide it. (From Stansbury's Expedition to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, 1852, p. 132.)

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Government of the United States

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Government of the United States itself gave unconscious credit to the situation by appointing and reappointing as governor of the Territory the spiritual head of the church, Brigham Young himself. In 1870 the Gentiles who had gathered in that Territory, though very few in number, organized what was called the "Liberal party." It had for its object the overthrow of polygamy and church interference in governmental matters. The Mormon people in opposition had a party called the "People's party." These two parties were purely prochurch and antichurch in character. In the Liberal party there were no Mormons; in the People's party there were no Gentiles. The fight which ensued and which lasted for the next twenty years was of the bitterest possible description. In 1891 the "People's party," so called, was disbanded, and the Democratic and Republican parties were organized throughout the Territory. Prior to that time, however, beginning probably as early as 1886, there became manifest a growing restlessness and dissatisfaction on the part of the younger men in the church, and some of the older ones as well, with reference to this condition of affairs. gan to be demands that the church should give up polygamy, and that a system of politics should be inaugurated in the State in harmony with that which existed in other communi-

As illustrative of this, in 1888 a number of young men of the church organized a Democratic party, which was called in derision the "Sage Brush Democracy," but which name they afterwards adopted in earnest themselves. This party nominated a candidate for Delegate in Congress and conducted a campaign against both of the old parties. In 1890 there occurred another instance. I happened to be living in the town of Provo, where Senator Smoot then resided and now resides. I was nominated as the candidate for mayor of the Liberal party. A number of the younger men in the church revolted against the People's Party and supported my candidacy. Among the leaders in that revolt was Senator Reed Smoot himself.

Since 1891 it has been charged, and there is some testimony in the record tending to show, that there has been interference on the part of some of the high officials of the church in political matters. I am not going to review the instances which are referred to, because, in the first place, I have not the time, and, in the second place, in view of the general statement which I shall make, it does not seem to me important to do so. Many of the instances which are mentioned by these witnesses are based wholly upon rumor and hearsay, which is always an unsafe kind of testimony. Some of them are absolutely disproven; but there still remain some cases, and, in my judgment, there have been some instances since the division on national party lines where high officials of the Mormon Church have interfered in political matters.

But the great and important fact to me—and it seems to me it ought to be also to the Senate-is that while there have been occasional instances of this kind there has been a steady improvement in that direction; and my deliberate judgment is that since 1900 there has been no instance of that kind in the State of Utah at all. I do not mean to say that some president of a stake or some bishop in some outlying locality may not have done something; but, so far as the leaders of the church are concerned, since 1900 there has been, to my mind, no well-authenticated case of interference.

Some reference has been made to the city election of 1903, when Mr. Knox, candidate on the Republican ticket, was defeated, and it was claimed that that was due to the interference of the church. The testimony is overwhelming, to the effect that it was not due to that at all. It was charged that Mr. Knox was nominated in the convention by improper and corrupt methods. It was insisted that delegates in the convention had been purchased, and there was a general revolt against those kinds of methods. I do not think that Mr. Knox himself was charged with having been a party to those transactions; but those charges were made, and there was a very bitter feeling in the Republican party with reference to them, and Mormons and Gentiles alike revolted and voted against Mr. Knox's candidacy.

Judge Charles S. Zane, who was one of the judges all through the prosecution of these polygamy cases, and who certainly can not be charged with being in any manner under the control of the Mormon Church, was one of the men who fought Mr. Knox's candidacy, and did it openly. O. J. Salisbury, a Gentile and national committeeman, was another. There were scores of prominent Gentiles who did the same. So I might go on with these other instances in the testimony as to the facts. But I will incorporate some extracts from four or five witnesses to the effect that since the present head of the church has been president he has not only kept out of politics himself, but he has kept the church out of politics; and my observation as to what has been going on in that State during the last five or six years—and it has been a somewhat close observation leads me to believe that that is true. Since that president has been at the head of the church the church and the president of the church have been kept out of politics.

There has been an advance in other respects. Mr. President,

I will ask to incorporate in my remarks, without reading, some extracts from the testimony of Judge Powers, Judge McCarty, Mr. Cole, Mr. Candland, and Mr. Stephens with reference to this advance, and also some extracts with reference to President Smith having kept out of politics.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The testimony referred to is as follows:

Judge Powers testified:

Judge Powers testified:

Mr. Powers. Well, there has been progress made that to me is, in view of the conditions that existed prior to that time, somewhat surprising as well as satisfactory. For instance, along about 1892 and prior to that time, and after that, but not to so great an extent, it was not an unusual thing; in fact, it was expected by those living in Utah that at the religious meetings held on Sunday nights preceding the election there would be political talks, and an indication given by the tenor of those talks as to how the people should vote. Now, we do not have those Sunday night talks just prior to the election. Of course we still have an editorial in the Deseret Evening News on the Saturday preceding the elections, generally, that we look for, but we do not have those talks. The people have progressed politically. They have progressed socially. The bitterness that was so intense between Mormons and Gentiles that it is hard to describe it, has in a great measure passed away, although it exists, unfortunately, to some extent yet. Take it socially. Prior to 1892 I do not know that any Mormons were members of the Alta Club, the leading social club of that city. At the present time there are Mormon members of that club, and as I say there has been an advance.

Mr. Van Cott. What have you to say, in your judgment, as to the honesty and sincerity of the Mormon men and women?

Mr. Powers. I believe the Mormon men and women are as honest and as sincere—I am speaking of the great mass of the people now—as any other people on earth.

Judge McCarty testified:

Judge McCarty testified:

Judge McCarty testified:

Mr. McCarty. I say the Mormon people, if they were to combine, would have the absolute control of the State and could nominate whomsoever they desire. They could exclude every Gentile from the tleket if they were so disposed. Realizing that they have this power, Gentiles are somewhat cautious about their candidacy, or somewhat apprehensive until they know whether there is going to be a fight against them or not. Now, I think a great deal too much prominence is given the church in these matters. I do not think the church is taking or has been in the last few campaigns taking the active part that has been attributed to the church; but candidates usually want to know whether there is going to be a fight made against them, realizing that if the church so desires or the people who compose it they could defeat them. A great many of them, I understand, have solicited and gone and conversed with the first presidency and others, but those Gentiles have proved to be generally the weakest candidates that have been placed on the ticket.

Senator Dubois. But they are anxious, are they not; they are solicitous to find out whether the church is going to oppose them or whether they will favor their candidacy?

Mr. McCarty. Yes. Owing to this continual agitation there and recognizing that the church is a factor that must be reckoned with, there is always an air, an atmosphere of uncertainty in every campaign.

Senator Dubois. What, in your judgment and in the judgment of men like you, is now and has always been the greater evil there, polygamy or church dictation in politics?

Mr. McCarty. Well, I do not know of any direct church dictation in politics. Of course I have always thought that this question of polygamy has been used a great deal as a mask with which to attack the church for supposed or alleged interferences, and so forth, in those matters. The only instance that I know of in the way of church interference, if it could be called such, was the Thatcher episode.

Mr. Samuel N. Cole, Gentile, o

Mr. Samuel N. Cole, Gentile, of Corinne, Utah, testified as follows:

Mr. Van Cott. How did you hold up in your vote with the Republican Mormons on the same ticket?

Mr. Cole. I ran right along with them, as near as I could make out, with the exception of this Petersen on the Democratic ticket against me. He was a Brigham City man. That is the greatest vote that is cast, at Brigham City. In his ward, the ward he lives in, I understand he ran a little ahead, but outside of that I ran with the ticket, right through the county.

Mr. Van Cott. Did you run a little ahead of your own ticket in Corinne precinct, where you live?

Mr. Cole. Yes; a little.

Mr. Van Cott. While you have lived in Boxelder County, have you seen any interference on behalf of the Mormon Church with the politics of the people or of the voters of either party?

Mr. Cole. No; I have not.

Mr. Van Cott. How have you found the Republican Mormons and the Democratic Mormons in regard to being independent in politics?

Mr. Cole. You mean whether they stay by the ticket?

Mr. Van Cott. I believe they will, certainly. There is no question about that. They stay by the ticket in our county as well as any people I know.

Mr. Van Cott. Calling attention to the time that you have been in

Mr. Cole. I believe they win, certainly. There is no question about that. They stay by the ticket in our county as well as any people I know.

Mr. Van Cott. Calling attention to the time that you have been in Utah, what is your opinion as to the manner in which the Gentiles have been treated in the Mormon county you refer to, namely, Boxelder County, in regard to offices and officers?

Mr. Cole. Well, they have been treated real well. The fact of the matter is, I can't notice where they make any distinction. Of course, there are generally some Mormons on the ticket. In fact, there are always some Mormons on the ticket, but there is a big majority of Mormons in the county. There are always some Gentiles on the ticket ever since I have been there.

'Mr. Van Cott. Are the principal affairs of the county administered by what are called "county commissioners?"

Mr. Cole. Yes.

Mr. Van Cott. Is one of them a Gentile?

Mr. Cole. We have one a Gentile, one a Mormon, and one that seems to be neither one, I believe.

Mr. Van Cott. The Gentile that is known as a Gentile—does he belong to any church?

Mr. Cole. Yes; I think he is a Baptist.

Mr. Van Cott. Do you know whether this is his first term?
Mr. Cole. No; this was his second term. He was elected last fall to his second term.
Mr. Van Cott. How did he go along with his comrades on the Republican ticket? Did he hold up with them?
Mr. Cole. He held right up with the ticket everywhere as near as I can make out. I inquired into it a little just to see how it was running.

Mr. Candland, Mormon, of Mount Pleasant, Utah, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. Calling your attention now to politics, what is your opinion as to the independence of the Mormon people in voting?

Mr. Candland. I know that they are independent, judging others

Mr. Candland. I know that they are independent, judging others from myself.

Mr. Van Cott. Well, from your observation?

Mr. Candland. My observation has been that they voted as they pleased, without any interference; that they would brook no inter-pleased, without any interference; that they would brook no interference.

Mr. VAN COTT. Now, in the actual conduct of political campaigns, have there been Gentiles elected over Mormons in that county?

Mr. CANDLAND. In some instances, yes.

Mr. VAN COTT. Will you give a few of them, please?

Mr. CANDLAND. I remember where bishops or presidents of stakes have been on the ticket and have been defeated by Gentiles who were quite bitter anti-Mormon at times. I remember that Mr. J. D. Page was elected to the constitutional convention over Mr. C. N. Lund, a very prominent Mormon, who was a Democrat.

Mr. VAN COTT. Any others?

Mr. CANDLAND. I know that Mr. George Christensen, a member of the stake presidency, has been repeatedly defeated by Gentiles. If you like, I can give you several instances.

Mr. VAN COTT. I would like you to name a few more.

Mr. CANDLAND. In 1895, I think—I am not quite positive as to that year; it was a city election—Mr. Andrew Neilson, a Gentile Republican, was elected over Bishop Lund, a Democrat, for justice of the peace. In 1902 Mr. A. L. Larsen, a Republican, was elected over George Christensen, of the stake presidency, for superintendent of schools.

Mr. VAN COTT. What was Larsen?

Mr. CANDLAND. Larsen was a Mormon, I think. I am not positive as to that, I never knew whether he was a Mormon or not.

Mr. VAN COTT. All right.

Mr. CANDLAND. In 1902 Mr. Owen, a Mormon holding no particular office, was elected over Mr. Petersen Mattson, of the stake presidency, for justice of the peace. In 1903 Mr. Bowman, a Gentile, was nominated for mayor over Mr. Mattson, and he was elected over George Christensen, a member of the stake presidency, for the office of mayor. That year we also elected two Republican councilors—one of them was the principal of a Presbyterian high school—over Mormons.

Mr. Stephens testified:

Mr. Stephens testified:

Mr. Stephens testified:

Mr. Stephens I would say that there are various kinds of church influence. There is, first, the influence which any man has. I would say "influence" without saying "church." There is, first, the influence that any man has who is respected in the community and whose judgment is respected by those who know him; and when it comes to a church, if he is a member of a church, undoubtedly he would have an additional influence among the members of that church by reason of being a member; and that would be true in the Mormon Church, and, perhaps, to some extent a little greater than in the other churches. I would call that, perhaps, legitimate church influence. That is the natural influence which follows from a man's standing in the community. If, however, a question came up which involved the interest of the Mormon Church, I would say, for instance, take the election of 1900, when the question of protection was quite prominent, and the Mormon Church is interested in the sugar business—I think if the leaders of the church would go out and say "We feel that our interest is in having the protective tariff continued," it would have great weight; and I would compare it, I think, to the influence of a manufacturer who would say to his workmen, "I can not dictate to you how you shall vote, but I think our interests lie this way;" and I think it would have its influence.

I think there are probably 25 per cent of the Mormon voters who could be swung one way or the other, and possibly might be, where there was something vital that came up.

Mr. Van Cort. You think that 75 per cent are beyond any kind of influence at all?

Mr. Stephens. No; I would not say that they were beyond any kind of influence at all. I do not think any man is beyond any kind of influence.

Mr. Van Cort. You mean.—

of influence at all. I do not think any man is beyond any kind of influence.

Mr. VAN COTT. You mean—
Mr. STEPHENS. I would say this: I believe the great majority of the members of the Mormon Church are opposed to church domination in politics and want it to be a thing of the past. They are very much opposed to it, and resent it, I think.

Mr. VAN COTT. And—
Mr. STEPHENS. Excuse me.
Mr. VAN COTT. Proceed. I thought you had finished.
Mr. STEPHENS. I was going to say, I think if the first presidency should openly advocate or dictate to the people how they should vote it would be resented and sat down upon. I think, as I said, that their influence would have weight in matters which affect the church or its interests.

influence would have weight in matters which affect the church or its interests.

Mr. Van Cott. Now, referring to the practical side of voting, what have you noticed in regard to Mormon voters being independent in politics?

Mr. Stephens. You mean with reference to voting for a Gentile?

Mr. Van Cott. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. Where a Mormon was on the ticket?

Mr. Van Cott. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. A case simply of two men—a Mormon on one side and a Gentile on the other?

Mr. Van Cott. Yes.

Mr. Stephens. In cases of that kind they are loyal to the ticket. I think at the time when Judge Morse was a candidate for city attorney against me that was quite apparent. He and I analyzed the vote together with that idea in view. I think a Mormon votes for a Gentile, where there is nothing else to influence him, just as readily as he would vote for a Mormon, and possibly in some cases more readily than a Gentile would vote for a Mormon.

Mr. VAN COTT. You have expressed yourself along the line from the time you went to Utah up to the present, in a general way. What is your opinion now, after the experiment of fourteen years, as to the result that has been attained up to this time in the solution of the difficulties that have existed in Utah?

Mr. Stephens. I think the progress has been very satisfactory.

Mr. Worthington. I should like to ask a question or two.

Mr. Stephens. Just a moment, Colonel Worthington, on the matter of church influence.

I do not want to be understood as saying that there have not been some notable instances of what I would term "church influence," but I will say they are deprecated, and we very strongly disapprove of anyone seeking it, whether it be a Mormon or Gentile.

Mr. Van Cott. What is the feeling of the Mormon people themselves on that point?

Mr. Stephens. I think they resent it fully as strongly as do the Gentiles. It was promised them that they should be independent in politics when the manifesto was issued, and when we divided upon party lines, and I think that having tried their wings they do not want them clipped.

Mr. Arthur Pratt, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. What is your opinion as to the sincerity of Joseph F. Smith to keep the church out of politics, and his resolution to accomplish it?

Mr. Pratt. I think it has been his intention from the first, from the time that he assumed the reins of government—that is, his position as president of the church.

Mr. Van Cott. Yes.

Mr. Pratt. That it has been his intention, and that he has directly followed it, to keep the church out of politics.

The Chairman. I want to ask you one question. I understand you to say "When the present president, Mr. Smith, took the reins of government." When was that? Do you remember?

Mr. Pratt. I think about three years ago.

The Chairman. In 1901?

Mr. Pratt. Yes; I think so.

The Chairman. Since that time, since he took the reins of government, he has attempted to keep the church out of politics?

Mr. Pratt. I think so.

The Chairman. How was it before?

Mr. Pratt. Well, as far as he was concerned—

The Chairman. I am speaking about the attitude of the church.

Mr. Pratt. The head of the church?

The Chairman. Yes, and the attitude of the church previous to that time.

Mr. Pratt. Well, I do not think the time.

Mr. Pratt. Well. I do not think they were as particular about it some years before that.

The Chairman. What do you mean by not being particular about it?

Mr. Pratt. Well, I think there were a great many Gentiles who were seeking that influence, and I do not think President Snow was near as particular as President Smith has been.

The Chairman. Before that time it was a factor in politics, I suppose

Mr. Pratt. I am inclined to think so.

The Chairman. But since Mr. Smith has taken the reins of government there has been a change?

Mr. Pratt. There has been a change;

Mr. H. M. Dougall, Gentile, of Springville, Utah, testified as follows:

Mr. Worthington. Let me ask you, particularly during the last few years, since Joseph F. Smith became president of the organization, whether you have observed any indication at all that the church, as a church, has interfered in politics?

Mr. DOUGALL. The reputation in our end of the country is that Joseph F. Smith keeps strictly out of polities.

Mr. Worthington. According to what you have learned by common repute, is that true?

Mr. DOUGALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. Worthington. How do you find the Mormons as voters, so far as regards standing by their party?

Mr. DOUGALL. They usually stand pat.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You can usually count upon a Mormon Republican to vote the Republican ticket?

Mr. DOUGALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And a Mormon Democrat to vote the Democratic ticket?

Mr. Dougall. Yes, sir.

Mr. W. P. O'Meara, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. W. P. O'Meara, a Gentile, testified:

Mr. Van Cott. What is the sentim at there, and your own opinion, as to the sincerity of Joseph F. Smith to keep the church out of politics, to do away with new polygamous marriages and to prohibit them, and also of his resolution and ability to execute what you believe is his good faith in the matter?

Mr. O'Meara. So far as Joseph F. Smith is concerned interfering in politics, I think it is generally understood that when Gentiles, or even Mormons, go to him for support they get anything but encouragement; and as far as carrying out his own intentions is concerned, I have always found him in a business way—in the business I have had to do with him—a very fair, honest, and conscientious man. So far as carrying out the mandates of the church, of course I know nothing about that.

Mr. Hughes testified.

Mr. Hughes testified:

Mr. Van Cott. Do you know Joseph F. Smith or do you know of him?
Mr. Hughes. I know him by sight, and have known him for years. I never spoke to Mr. Smith.
Mr. Van Cott. What is the sentiment among Gentiles as to whether he is sincere in keeping the church out of politics?
Mr. Hughes. The sentiment is that he is exceedingly sincere and very honest in that regard, and in all regards, in fact. They think he is a fanatic in religion, but very honest, and that he is determined to keep the church out of politics, and has done so since he has been president. That is a strong feeling among the Gentiles.

Mr. Stephens testified:

Senator Overman. Will you tell me, Mr. Stephens, why it was that the church interfered in behalf of Kearns when he was elected and why hey were not for him this time? Was there any reason?

Mr. Stephens I can not say why President Snow, if he was for him, was for him; but at the present time there is a different president.

President Smith is generally understood to be unfavorable to the church mixing in political affairs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, in another respect the progress has been exceedingly satisfactory. In the constitutional convention which assembled in 1895, out of a total membership of 107, there were 30 polygamists. In the first State legislature, out of a total membership of 63, there were 6 polygamists. In the first State legislature, In 1899 there were 5 polygamists in the legislature. In 1903 there were 3 polygamists, and in 1905, two years ago, there was only 1 polygamist, and in the present legislature, according to the information I have, which I think is reliable, although I do not absolutely vouch for it, there is no polygamist at all

The same progress is manifest in the church. It is true, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] said the other day, that when Senator Smoot was elected a member of the apostolate a majority of the apostles were polygamists. In 1896, out of the 15 who constitute the governing heads of the church—the presidency and the twelve apostles—there were only 3 monogamists. In 1900 a majority of them were polygamists, while to-day out of the 15 members there are only 5 polygamists, while 10 are monogamists.

The same radical change is to be seen in the subordinate offi-cers of the church. Out of something over 800 subordinate officials of the church, presidents of stakes and bishops, there were two years ago, when the testimony was given, only 53 polygamists. There are to-day probably, according to my information, not to exceed about thirty-five.

Mr. President, the Mormon Church, like every other church and every other thing in the universe, is subject to the law of evolution. I am glad to believe that in some way I do not understand there is at the very heart of things some mighty power which silently and surely, if slowly, works for the exaltation and uplifting of all mankind. I am not religious in the ordinary acceptation of the term; I have no patience with mere forms or mere creeds or mere ceremonies; but I do believe with all the strength of my soul that "there is a power in the universe, not ourselves, which makes for righteousness." I am an optimist in all things. I do not believe that the world is growing worse. I feel sure it is getting better all the time.

I am no believer in the doctrine of the fall of man. Man has not fallen. He has risen and will rise. In the process of evolu-tion he has so far progressed that he is able to stand erect and look upward, but his feet are still upon the earth, and so while he sees the heights he ascends them only with slow and toilsome effort. But he does ascend.

In that great masterpiece of imaginative writing, Les Misérables, the immortal Victor Hugo, with marvelous and consummate skill, has traced for us the gradual uplifting of his principal character from a condition of sordid poverty and sin and misery and crime and vileness to a position of honor and trust and confidence and power for good and purity of life, and thence to his final apotheosis in an act of sublime self-sacrifice which challenges the profoundest admiration of our souls. To my mind the most magnificent figure in all the literature of fiction is that of Jean Valjean, not because he finally stood upon the heights, but because with infinite toil and struggle he came upward from the abyss. And so, in measuring the progress of any man, as it seems to me, the question is not so much upon what height does he stand as it is, How far has he climbed?

I do not say that conditions are perfect in Utah; they are not perfect anywhere; but I do say that conditions to-day are immeasurably better than they have ever been before, and that, in my judgment, they will be better to-morrow than they are to-day. I do not claim that there are no evils among the people. Some remnants of the old objectionable conditions still exist. But I do claim that those evils are fewer in number and less in extent by far to-day than they have ever been before, and, in my judgment, it will be but a short time until they are eradicated altogether.

A community, Mr. President, like an individual, does not overcome its bad habits without a struggle. Indeed, the struggle is more difficult because the number of individuals who are concerned, with their varying degrees of self-restraint and desire for reform and strength of purpose, renders the problem more complex. As with an individual, so with a community. There are the occasional lapses, the goings forward and the slippings back, the fallings down and the risings up, and, thank God, the same ultimate triumph if the resolution be sound at the core.

Mr. President-

I hold it truth, with him who sings To one clear harp in divers tones, That men may rise on stepping-stones Of their dead selves to higher things.

Upon stepping stones of its old self Utah has risen and will We must not forget that the conditions of which the American people justly complained were nearly fifty years growing the wrong way; they have been only fifteen years growing the right way, but the great and important and splendid fact is that they have been growing the right way. And I say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, and to the country, with what I believe to be the words of soberness and truth, that the people of that State are ridding themselves of these objectionable conditions just as rapidly and just as effectually as any far-sighted man, knowing the circumstances, could reasonably have expected they would, and that we are to-day far beyond the slightest danger of any successful reactionary movement.

And let me say further— Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will it disturb the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will make it as short as possible. I am very tired and am anxious to get

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator said that the People's Party and the Liberal party disbanded, and that the members of those parties joined the Republican and Democratic parties, which condition continued for a number of years. But is it not true that recently the Gentiles have been uniting again in Utah? In Salt Lake City, where the Senator lives, there is an American party, and I understand 80 per cent of that party is composed of Republicans. That party has been organized, as I understand and as is understood out there, to protest against the domination of the Mormon Church in political affairs, to bring about a separation of church and state.

I would be glad if the Senator would explain what his idea is in regard to the organization of this American partisan party and of the tendency of the Gentiles in Utah to revert to the old Liberal party. Is there any justification for it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The American party was organized after my predecessor in the Senate, who came here, in my deliberate judgment, partly as the result of the assistance given him by the then president of the Mormon Church—that is one of the instances of church interference that I have in mind-that party was organized after this, and after that ex-Senator had endeav-ored to get the help of the Mormon Church again and it had been refused. There are Senators within the sound of my voice who know, or have every reason to believe, that what I say about it is true.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me. Let me answer his question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I beg pardon. Mr. SUTHERLAND. When the ex-Senator, my predecessor and I should not have spoken of this but for the question of the Senator from Idaho-when that ex-Senator desired to come back to the Senate, according to the statements which are made in Utah, and which I have no reason to doubt, he went to the present head of the church and sought his aid, and that president told him that he was not in politics, that the church was not in politics, and that neither of them would be dragged into politics by him. The head and front of the American party in Utah is ex-Senator Thomas Kearns, and the Salt Lake Tribune and the Salt Lake Telegram are his personal organs.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will yield for a question only.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I want to get through.
Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to ask the Senator if the most splendid Gentiles in Salt Lake do not belong to this party and if it is not the dominant party in Salt Lake?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That some of the most splendid Gentiles in Salt Lake do belong to that party I think is true. There are a great many Gentiles who have carried along their bitterness from the old days and who have always been waiting for an opportunity-they are unreconstructed and never will be reconstructed-to slap the Mormon Church, and they have taken advantage of this situation. They are good men, among the best citizens we have there. The rank and file of the American party are good people, but I say the leadership, the people responsible for the American party, are this man whom I have mentioned and his lieutenants.

Mr. DUBOIS. To return-

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not care to yield further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah declines to yield further.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to finish what I have to say on this matter.

The other branch of the question which the Senator asked me was whether they were not the dominant party. They are not the dominant party. At the last election there were in the neighborhood of 35,000 Gentile votes cast—

Mr. DUBOIS. I said in Salt Lake City.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I say in Utah. I am not speaking of Salt Lake. I speak of Utah. The Gentiles in other parts of the State are just as good as the Gentiles in Salt Lake. Out of 35,000 Gentile votes cast in the State of Utah, the American party cast 11,000. The American party did not elect a single candidate in Salt Lake County at the last election. Two years ago there was a division between Democrats and Republicans—this was the third party—and it slipped in be-tween and elected a city ticket. But at the last county But at the last county election which we held there it did not elect a single man upon its ticket. The American party is growing less and less all the time. At the last school election, which was held in Salt Lake City within the last two or three months, it did not elect, although it had candidates in every precinct, a single candidate to the board of education. The American party is not the dominant party either in Salt Lake County or in the State of Utah.

Mr. President, let me resume where I left off. I want to say further that any man who asserts—and I care not who he may be-that there is any feeling of hostility on the part of the people or any of the people of the State of Utah toward this Government either speaks with inexcusable ignorance or he mis-states the facts.

When the war broke out with Spain, and the call for volunteers was made, Utah was among the first of all the States to respond. Mormons and Gentiles alike freely offered their services to their country. Mormons and Gentiles together marched away to the music of the same drum tap, with the same love and reverence for the flag, which floated impartially above them both and found equal loyalty beneath its folds. The Utah batteries—commanded by Maj. Richard W. Young, himself a Mormon, a grandson of Brigham Young, a graduate of West Point, and as brave and loyal and splendid a gentleman as ever wore the uniform of a soldier-won for themselves in the Philippines a name of heroic and imperishable glory. Mormon and Gentile fought side by side in the swamps and the rice fields, and gave up their lives and lay with their silent white faces upturned to the pitiless sun of Luzon with the same patriotic devotion to the cause of their country. Not a man of them— Mormon or Gentile—but honored and glorified the uniform he

In the terrible flood and cyclone which occurred in the Society Islands within a year the young Mormon missionaries stationed in those islands, at the risk of their lives, helped save the property of the Government, the archives and records of the Government. I have here a copy of a letter written by the consul in those islands to President Smith, and published in a newspaper in Salt Lake, in which he speaks of that incident. He says:

dent. He says:

Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to inform you that during the cyclone and high water at Papeete, Tahiti, February 8, the Mormon elders rendered conspicuous service at the American consulate, at the risk of their lives, to rescue the archives. The elders were Messrs, Hail, Peck, Clawson, Pierson, Tibbetts, Miner, Wilkinson, Noall, and Huffaker. Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Wilkinson also were kind and hospitable to myself and my relatives during three days while we were their guests.

The elders have produced a splendid example of loyalty to the interests of their country abroad. I have reported their bravery and successful service to the Department of State.

I congratulate you upon such noble representatives in this insular community.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. F. Dory,

Consul.

WM. F. DOTY, Consul.

In the report to the War Department he states:

In the work of rescue conspicuous service was rendered, at the risk of life, by the following American Mormon missionaries—

And then he names the same ones named in the letter to the president of the church.

Mr. President, it is time that the voice of calumny should be silent. It is time that the tongue of slander should cease. Let us have the truth about Utah by all means, but in God's name let it be the truth; and when any man says that the people of the State are not loyal, that they are not patriotic, that they have any feeling of hostility toward this Government, that life or property is unsafe in any part of the State, that any of them teach their children to disrespect the flag, he utters a falsehood as cruel and as foul and as foundationless as any ever concocted by the father of lies himself.

Mr. President, just a word or two personal to Senator Smoot. It is shown by the testimony that not only is Senator Smoot not a polygamist, but it is also shown that he has been opposed to the practice of polygamy since he was a young man. There is testimony in this record to that effect, and there is no testimony from any witness that I recall to the contrary.

I wish very briefly to call attention to one or two extracts, taking first the testimony of Judge James A. Miner, a Gentile, who was a judge on the bench, appointed by Mr. Harrison, from Michigan, and who went there as early as 1889. At page 831 of the second volume Mr. Miner says:

Mr. Van Cott. Do you know anything about the reputation he bore-Referring to Senator SMOOT-

Referring to Senator Smoot—in those early days in regard to the practice of polygamy?
Mr. Miner. Yes, sir.
Mr. Van Cott. What was it?
Mr. Miner. My deputies were deputies for that district, which included Mr. Smoot's residence—that is, Utah County, and those deputies, during the year 1890, from July on, were over the entire district, and before I personally became acquainted with Mr. Smoot—during the time of these prosecutions or about the time of the manifesto—they reported to me, and I obtained from that reputation and from others, in speaking of him, that he was an active, bright young man from Provo, and his leanings were strongly in favor of the enforcement—that is, the people should obey the law. He was against the practice of polygamy. They regarded him as the coming young man of the State. He was so regarded, I think, from that time on as a bright, active, lawabiding man, of excellent character and habits.

Mr. Whitecotton a Gentile lawver, who lives at Provo tes-

Mr. Whitecotton, a Gentile lawyer, who lives at Provo, testified upon the same subject. After he had explained that one of Senator Smoor's heresies was that he belonged to the Republican party and believed in protection, he was asked this ques-

Senator Foraker. What are some of the other heresies he had?

Mr. Whitecotton. That is the chief one; and he always voted the Republican ticket. It is a kind of an unpleasant thing for us Democrats to have too many fellows do that. But they do it.

Mr. Van Cott. Speaking of the other heresies that Mr. Smoot had, what was the general understandling in the community in Provo about any heresy that Mr. Smoot had as being opposed to the practice of polygamy in those early days?

Mr. Whitecotton. He was a heretic on that, too.

Mr. Van Cott. He was opposed to polygamy; he was understood so to be. He was looked upon as one of the young men in Utah who were to redeem Israel.

I call attention to the testimony of Mrs. Coulter to the same effect, on page 173 of volume 3, without stopping to read it.

I also have here a piece of testimony that is peculiarly and strongly corroborative of the testimony of these witnesses. 1892 there was a hearing before the Senate Committee on Territories with reference to whether or not a bill for the local government of the Territory of Utah should be passed. Among the witnesses who appeared before that committee was Judge John Judge Judd was a Gentile, a Democrat, who had been appointed by President Cleveland back in 1885 to go to Utah as judge, and he remained there for a great many years. As I say, this was in 1892, fourteen years ago. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] suggests, a very large number of these cases came before him, and he probably personally sentenced to imprisonment hundreds of persons convicted of polygamous cohabitation.

Judge Judd, in the course of his testimony given fourteen years ago, when Mr. Smoot was a young man, said:

years ago, when Mr. Smoot was a young man, said:

Now the facts. The Mormon people, when they settled that country out there, settled it with an attempt to plant upon American soil a civilization of three thousand years ago. Their system of priesthood, for I have studied their theology, and their system from their own standpoint, reading their own literature, was undertaken to be patterned after that of the ancient Jewish priesthood, and included in it, like the latter, the polygamic relation. When they undertook this thing, of course, in the estimation of the civilization of America and of its laws—the first one being passed, however, in 1862—it became a criminal institution. No one recognized that more thoroughly than did Brigham Young, the leader of the Mormon people, and the Mormon people themselves.

Now, omitting some:

Now, omitting some:

I began then to talk to the younger men and the younger women, and to see if I could discover whether there was back of that an absolute sentiment in favor of polygamy. I had been told, and the estimates demonstrated beyond doubt that there was probably not over 25 or 3 per cent of the male population in polygamy. The settlement of Utah was forty or forty-five years old, and many of the men and women born there were grandfathers or grandmothers. I could not understand how it was that those people were consenting to such continual attacks, to such deprivations, and to such odding in the estimation of their fellow-citizens in the United States in this condition of things. And, gentlemen, I discovered as clearly a marked line between those who favored polygamy and those who did not as the banks of the Mississippi River.

The younger people would come to me in my room in private and talk to me about it. I could give names and incidents of Mormons high in life, some of whom the chairman of this committee is acquainted with, who came to me and urged me, saying, "Judge, for God's sake, break this thing up. We have had enough trouble. We have had all we can possibly stand of it. We have had one right after another taken from us. We have been put in an awkward attitude before our fellow-citizens of the United States, and for God's sake break it up." Others said to me, notably REED SMOOT, son of the president of a stake, and the Republican candidate for mayor, and himself the product of a polygamous marriage, "Judge, we can not stand this thing, and we will not stand it; it must be settled."

Judge Judd is quite correct about that. When polygamy was given up by the church, it was owing to a demand coming from within the church quite as much as it was to a demand coming from without, and among the men who stood in favor of that sort of thing, in favor of compelling the church to conform its practices to the law, none stood more firmly than did Senator REED SMOOT.

Reduced to the last analysis, then, we have a man here who has never violated any law so far as we know; whose conduct in every respect is above reproach; who has been opposed to the practice of polygamy ever since he was a boy, and yet whose expulsion from the Senate is demanded upon the ground that he shall not be permitted from this exalted place to make war upon the American home. Such a demand to me seems hysteria pure and simple.

Mr. President, there are many things that ought to be discussed in this connection—many things that I intended originally to discuss—but I have already taken too much of the time of the Senate. I have spoken to my own weariness and no doubt to the weariness of the Senate as well. Just a word more and I am through. Mr. President, it is asserted by this original protest in the most positive terms that Senator Smoot is not charged with any offense cognizable by law. In all the things which constitute the decencies and moralities of life he stands here, as he stands everywhere he is known, beyond criticism and above reproach. Day after day and month after month for nearly four years he has met the shafts of ridicule, falsehood, and slander that have been directed against him, and he has faced them all with se-rene and patient courage. However much he may have chafed inwardly, he has borne himself outwardly with rare composure and self-restraint. He believes that the day of his vindication is at hand. But if it shall be otherwise, if the verdict of this great jury shall be against him, if the long strugglo shall end not in vindication, sweeter than the honey of paradise, but in a pitiful defeat more bitter than death itself to an honorable man, he will, in my judgment, step from this august Chamber with anguish unspeakable in his heart, but with no stain upon his soul, because no man's soul can be stained save by himself. During the delivery of Mr. Sutherland's speech, The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will kindly suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business of the Senate be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thank the Senator from Oregon for his courtesy.

After the conclusion of Mr. Sutherland's speech,

FORT WRIGHT MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 24048) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill, inasmuch as a similar bill has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to locate a right of way, not exceeding 100 feet in width, through the lands of the Fort Wright Military Reservation, if, in his judgment, it can be done in such a manner as not to interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes by the United States; and when said right of way shall be so located it is hereby granted during the pleasure of Congress to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line thereon: Provided, That the said right of way and the width and location thereof through said lands, the compensation therefor, and the regulations for operating said railroad within the limits of the said military reservation so as to prevent all damage to public property or for public uses shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War prior to any entry upon said lands or the commencement of the construction of said works: Provided, also, That whenever said right of way shall cease to be used for the purposes aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL ELECTIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4563) to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after the word "shall" down to and including dollars," in line 3, and insert "upon conviction be punished by a fine of not exceeding one thousand and not less than two hundred and fifty dollars, or by imprisonment for a term of not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I should like to inquire if that is the bill which was reported originally by our Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; it came originally from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and there is an amendment from the House which is in entire harmony with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF OBSOLETE CANNON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4423) providing for the donation of obsolete cannon with their carriages and equipments to the University of Idaho, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to deliver to the University of Idaho, at Moscow, Idaho, two obsolete cannon, with their carriages and equipments, now in possession of said University of Idaho, to become the property of the said university for ornamentation of the grounds of the said university: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of said cannon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 208, by Mr. Foraker.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I understand that the Senator from Ohio is bringing up the resolution about which there has been a long discussion. I have yielded the appropriation bills, so far as I am concerned, so that this subject may be taken up and gotten out of the way.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the order is. I am trying to find out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By virtue of the unanimous-consent agreement made this morning, the Chair has laid before the Senate resolution No. 208, introduced by the Senator from Ohio, respecting the Brownsville matter. The Senator from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mal-

LORY

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the questions presented by the various resolutions that have been pending for several weeks past relating to what is commonly known as the Brownsville incident involve a question of the power of one of the coordinate branches of the Government, the authority and power of the President to do what was done by his order, namely, the discharge of the enlisted men of a battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Brownsville at the time of the attack The Senate has had the benefit of the on that sleeping town. views of some of its ablest members upon that question. The discussion has revealed not only a great diversity of view, but has revealed the fact that views here are entertained regarding the power of the President that are utterly inconsistent with and contradictory of each other.

A portion of the membership of this body believe that the President has the power, under the authority conferred on him by the Constitution in making him Commander in Chief of the Army, to discharge a soldier at any time, whenever, in the judgment of the President, it is for the good of the service that such action should be taken. Another part of the membership of this body hold the view that under the fourth article of war, an enactment of Congress, the President possesses the same power, vested in him by the will of both bodies of the Congress of the United States; that he has been invested with a discretion to act or not act, as in his judgment seems proper; and that when he does exercise that discretion it is beyond the power of anyone or any set of men to question his authority and his right to so act.

This proposition, Mr. President, is one that is not confined to the personality of any Executive. It is a broad question of power to be exercised by one of the coordinate branches of the Government. If that coordinate branch possesses that power, then I have no hesitation in laying down as a proposition which can not be disputed that it is beyond the scope and authority of either of the other branches of the Government to question that authority.

Therefore, Mr. President, it becomes a most important step to be taken at the outset to determine whether the President in acting as he did was within the scope of his power and authority.

A third element of the composition of this body hold the view that the President has no power, either under his constitutional designation as Commander in Chief or under the fourth article of war, unlimited and unqualified as it is, to dismiss a single enlisted man of the Army without giving him an opportunity to be heard.

Those of us who stand in the second category I have indicated and those who stand in the first can not, in my judgment, consistently vote for this resolution. If they believe, as they claim they do believe, that the President acted within the scope of his power and authority, then they will place themselves in an attitude that can not be justified or explained if they vote for this resolution.

But, Mr. President, there is another point of objection to it, and that lies in the fact that whether it is in fact or not an equivocal use of language, it nevertheless has impressed Senators of great learning and ability, lawyers of standing and reputation, as being susceptible of two very different and conflicting interpretations. To illustrate that I will read an extract from some remarks made by the brilliant Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] on yesterday, when called upon to give his construction of the meaning of his resolution. He said:

Mr. President, I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], that my understanding of this language is that it does not commit the Senate on this proposition in any sense whatever, except only to let the whole matter stand in abeyance so far as this investigation is concerned. That is the theory upon which I am willing to modify the resolution, with that understanding. In other words, the effect will be precisely the same as though we were to say "neither affirming nor denying the legality."

There is a clear-cut exposition of the meaning, purpose, and intent of this resolution, and, coming from the distinguished gentleman who has offered the modification, which seems to have met the approval of a majority of this body, it must be given the weight which it necessarily derives from such a source.

On the opposite page of the RECORD I read from the remarks of the very able and clear-headed Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], who, after discussing at some length the meaning of the resolution, closes his remarks in the following language:

I can vote for this, not on the false assumption that it means something else than what its words are, but I can vote for it upon the assumption that it means that we do not question in any way, so far as this case is concerned, the legal power or the constitutional power of the President of the United States to dismiss without honor either in time of peace or in time of war.

Mr. President, it is true, if we are to believe the statements made in the press, that the amicable arrangement whereby this resolution seems to have been accepted by a majority of this body has been inspired by information received to the effect that the Executive is willing for it to be adopted in its present shape. I for one do not wish to be understood as permitting an Executive or anyone else to shape my action in this body on a matter of this supreme importance. We are not legislat-ing here for any particular Executive; we are not legislating here in the interests of any particular party; we are enacting laws and passing resolutions for the purpose of doing all that is necessary for the good and the welfare of the people of the country. Our action upon this resolution is not limited and will not stop at Theodore Roosevelt. It goes beyond and will stand as a guide and a mark for his successors for generations to come. Therefore, viewing it as I do, I have no hesitation in saying that I would feel that I had stultified myself if when this vote is had it would appear that I had cast my vote in favor of the Viewing it, therefore, Mr. President, 'as I do, and desiring to give an opportunity to those who agree with me to give an expression to their best judgment upon those views, I have drawn up a resolution which at the proper time I shall propose as a substitute for that of the Senator from Ohio, and for the information of the Senate I will read it now:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate the recent action of the President in discharging without honor enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infanty was within the scope of his authority and power and a proper exercise thereof.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the recent attack on the town of Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. President, I have thought proper to authorize the committee to go into an inquiry into the facts after I have provided for a declaration that, in the judgment of the Senate, the President has acted within the scope of his powers and has acted properly. My reason for doing that is that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] said yesterday it is possible that in a case of the importance this one is it may be proper and right for the Senate to investigate the facts, not for the purpose of hereafter questioning the power and authority of the President, but for the purpose of gaining all information that may hereafter be useful in legislation pertaining to the Army; and with that purpose in view and with that purpose only justifying such an addendum to the first part of the resolution, I have thought proper to permit the investigation.

Mr. President, I offer the resolution I have just read as a substitute for that of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TELLER obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the resolution on the table. Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator to withhold that a moment. I wish to say a few words.

Mr. FORAKER. I will do so. I enter the motion, but I will withhold it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

**Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate the recent action of the President in discharging without honor enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was within the scope of his authority and power and a proper exercise thereof.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere, the expenses to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TELLER. I yield for a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. It has been suggested that I made my motion out of order, the Senator from Colorado having the floor and it not having been yielded to me. Now that he yields to me the floor for that purpose, I enter my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest that the entering of a motion necessarily would preclude debate.

Mr. TELLER. That is a fact.

Mr. FORAKER. I withhold the motion.

Mr. BACON. The Senator can reoffer it at any time.

Mr. FORAKER. I enter the motion, but withhold it until Senators can discuss the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory] is to do what it has been claimed the resolution which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] offered yesterday would do. I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the wording of his resolution:

That, without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President, etc.

That is a negative form of indorsing the President's action, in my judgment. The Senator from Ohio, who sits some distance from me, shakes his head; but it certainly was claimed on the floor of the Senate here yesterday that those words meant or were equivalent to saying, "We do not question your authority; we leave that; we admit your authority.

Mr. President, this debate began about the 3d of December, and every resolution that was put in here except one proceeded upon the theory that they only wanted the facts, and the ques-tion of law was not to be and ought not to be considered. I made up my mind in the beginning that I would vote for getting the facts, and I am not concerned about the law at the present time. I thought at a later time we might determine that phase.

I read over some of the arguments made by the friends of the President's authority, and I was particularly struck by a statement made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], that the President had the authority without any statutory or constitutional authority by way of inheritance from the King of Great Britain. I have an idea myself that there is not anybody in any official position anywhere who can fall back upon the inherited right to do certain things. when we cut loose from Great Britain we cut loose from the prerogatives of the King; and if we did inherit them, we certainly inherited them by mistake, because we did not intend to If anyone will take the Declaration of Independence and read it over, he will see that the authors of the Declaration certainly were not anxious to inherit anything from the King, whom they denounced from the beginning to the close of the Declaration.

Mr. President, it is a new doctrine that you are inheriting from the King, though I expect to live long enough to see that doctrine become popular in certain circles and in certain politi-cal parties. A year ago last fall I was present in the supreme court of Colorado when a lawyer of great ability, who could make a speech on one side as good as he could on the other, who could defend a law that he did not believe in as well as he could one that he did, stated to the court that they had inherited all the prerogatives of the King's court. He said that when we went into the organization of the United States in the shape we did the King's prerogative, or the King's court's prerogative, was floating around and that it had to lodge somewhere, and so it had lodged in the supreme courts of the several

Mr. President, it seems to me that any lawyer making that statement to the supreme court ought to have been rebuked, either for his ignorance or for his unfairness. The court seemed to take it all in and looked on with great pleasure when he said to them: "It is not in the power of the legislature to limit your authority at all; they can give you authority; but what you get by inheritance they can not interfere with." That being received by the court rather graciously, he added: "Nor is it possible for the people of this State to take it away from you even by constitutional amendment." And, Mr. President, six of that court held that that is good law.

I have not much patience with anybody who talks about inherited prerogatives or inherited rights. This is a country of law, and every man who has the power to do anything, whether Federal or State, derives it either from the Constitution or from If the President had the authority to dismiss these men-and I do not intend to discuss that question, because I am not able to do so to-night—he derived it from some positive statute or from some provision of the Constitution.

do not know whether he had that authority or not; I have not looked into the question, and I do not want to look into it, because it is not necessary to do so; but I do not want to commit myself to the statement that I do not question his right. I am ready to meet any legal question when it comes before me, but I have never been in the habit of volunteering my judgment on such questions when there is no occasion for it.

I have looked over some of the speeches which have been made on this subject. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] quoted the case of Blake v. The United States, which is found in 103 United States Reports. It has been quoted by nearly every Senator who has spoken, I think—I am not certain whether the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] quoted it or not—but it has been quoted by others on the floor. That is the only case at which I have looked. I thought I had some recollection of that case, because that case involved a question which we had before us when Mr. Cleveland was President, upon the right of the President to make removals; and while I am pretty hoarse and do not wish to talk for more than a moment or two, I want to say that that case was simply this: A chaplain, who is not strictly a military officer, but a civil officer, thought he had been improperly treated. So he wrote to the Department stating that if they could not rectify the treatment he had received, he would resign, and he sent in his resignation. The President thereupon accepted his resignation, sent the name of his successor to the Senate, and the Senate confirmed him. Later the friends of the former chaplain concluded that he was insane when he sent in the resignation, and so could not have properly resigned, and that he was still in the Army. What did the court say? The court simply said that when the President made the nomination and this body confirmed it, the chaplain was out of the Army, and that was all there was of it. That has nothing in the world to do with the question of the dismissal of private soldiers. I presume a little attention to some of the other quotations might show that they were more applicable to this case than was that decision. But that is not what I want to talk about.

Mr. President, I want to know what this resolution means? I understood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] to say that it was simply a declaration that we did not intervene; that we did not say anything about it—hands off. I can not read it in that way. I could understand very well if the Senator had said "without asserting or denying the legal right of the President," it might have been left for future consideration; but when some lawyer raises a question and I say "I do not question your law," I think I admit that the law is as he quotes it. I do not want any examination of the question whether the President was correct or not. That can be done at another time. I only want to say we have so often provided by statute as to how the President should act in such cases that it seems to me pretty late to say we can not do it, or that we could not have done it in that case.

I have sometimes been pretty free in my criticisms of the Executive; especially I have felt that I had the right to criticise his legal statements, as every lawyer has, but I can imagine a case very readily, and so can any Senator if he will think for a moment. Suppose that something is done by the President, and we take it up and declare with solemnity that he has not transcended the law. The House of Representatives takes it up and concludes that he has. They send over articles of impeachment, and the President is to be tried by a tribunal that has already adjudicated the case.

Suppose we should say, on the other hand, that he had not transcended the law, that he had not committed any wrongful act—because it is not a mere question of law; you can have the same thing and the same necessity for supporting the President's acts when the law has nothing to do with it—suppose we say the President is right, and we all agree to it, and the other House sends over a message to the effect that they do not think so. We should then witness the spectacle of the Senate sitting down gravely to consider what it had determined beforehand. It seems to me that a little consideration would indicate that unless a case is exceedingly important and we should be obliged to intervene—and I am not able to imagine a case where we ought to be required to do that—we ought to let the President alone.

I would not vote, Mr. President, for a resolution saying that the President had not the right to do what he has done, nor would I vote to say he has the right, and that is what I think this resolution means.

I want to say that I desired to vote for the other resolutions. They all went upon the theory that we wanted the facts. There was only one resolution, and that was formed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], which indicated that we were declaring that the President had the constitutional and legal authority to do these things. That, I think, did not meet the approbation of the Senate, and it was withdrawn. So up to yesterday, or perhaps I ought to say up to the time the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] offered his amendment, there had been no question before the Senate of the President's being right or wrong in the matter. Of course it was debated extensively by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] and by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] in response, and by several Senators on this side of the Chamber; but I supposed that that was simply an oratorical display or a display of their knowledge of the law, and that all the resolutions, with the exception of that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, simply called for an investigation of the facts.

Now, do we want the facts? We do not want the facts so as to pass upon the question whether or not the President is right. The very act itself is all we need to know. We can then look at the law and determine that question for ourselves. I repeat, do we need the facts?

Here is a most remarkable case. The Army is supposed to be in extreme cases the support of the law. In a town of a neighboring State, where this battalion was stationed—and it is immaterial whether the troops were white or black—they got into an émeute. They "shot up" the town, as it would be called in the western part of the country; and in shooting up the town they killed one man and wounded others. So far as I am concerned I do not want any facts as to who did that shooting. I have not the slightest idea in the world but that those soldiers did it; but, Mr. President, I do want the facts in order to determine what particular men were guilty of that crime. I want those facts, because I want adequate punishment meted out to those murderers; for, under the law, we all know that, having been participants in an illegal transaction which resulted in murder, every man connected with it is guilty of murder.

Mr. President, we are told that the murderers would not admit that they had been engaged in this émeute, and the men who knew who had been engaged in it would not admit it. Who knows how many men knew about it? I believe I have heard it said once or twice that probably twenty men were engaged in the affray and that perhaps twenty more were cognizant of the fact that these soldiers had been out on this shooting expedition. Does anybody here say that there has been such an investigation made as ought to have been made, not in the interest of the colored man, but in the interest of the American Army? We want to know whether we are putting into the American Army men of that character, and we want to punish the men who did the shooting. Does anybody here pretend that there might not have been an investigation that would have brought out the facts?

Mr. President, is it not our duty to go to the fullest possible extent to find out who the guilty men are?

I have never been a criminal lawyer, but I have seen a great many criminal cases tried, and in my youth I have tried a few; but I will guarantee that I could select agents who would have gone there, if the soldiers had been retained, or would have gone in after they had left, and ascertained all the facts. Twenty men were guilty as principals, it is stated, and 20 more were guilty as accessories, who should be punished if they should fail to disclose the facts—40 men in all out of 167 men, citizens of the United States. I do not care what their color is, Mr. President. Every citizen of the United States is entitled to the same protection of the law, whether he is white or black or red. Now, those 167 men are sent out, branded as murderers; and is it not the duty of this Senate to provide some method, if a method is available, by which we may determine the facts, so that we may punish the guilty, and, Mr. President, what is important to me, that we may acquit the innocent?

Mr. President, I was brought up under the old idea that it was as much the duty of the Government to protect the man who was put in the box to be tried for a crime as it was to prosecute him; that it was the duty of the judge, and that it was the duty of the district attorney, if he found during the trial that a man was not guilty, to insist upon his discharge. But, Mr. President, that may not be the law; and I presume it is not now, but it ought to be the law. It has been the law of our English-speaking people ever since civilization fairly began in Great Britain. It likewise was the law in Normandy, whence the ancestors of many of our people came.

ancestors of many of our people came.

It is said that the dismissal of these soldiers was not a punishment. I understand one of the men had been twenty-seven years in the public service and had had a good record during all of that time. I think, Mr. President, the Government owes it to him to provide, if possible, some method to find out whether he had guilty knowledge of the facts. Nobody, I believe, claims that he was engaged in the émeute; and if he is turned out of the Army and disgraced, he will be turned out and disgraced simply because it is not considered of sufficient importance to send a committee down there to investigate this case as it ought to be investigated. I do not suppose anybody thinks that dismissal from the Army is a proper punishment for the men who have been guilty of murder, nor is it a proper punishment for the men who concealed the murderers' guilt.

Mr. President, since this debate began I heard some Senator say—I do not remember who it was—that the Army was a posse comitatus. I want to enter my protest against that statement. It is not a posse comitatus at all. The Army of the United States can only be used where the statutes or the Constitution provide that it may be used. The posse comitatus consists of the people themselves who are called upon to support the sheriff. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] will agree with me, I know, that that is the law.

Mr. SPOONER. It is the power of the county.
Mr. TELLER. Yes; some years ago, Mr. President, right after the civil war, the Army was used as a posse comitatus, and one day there came from the House of Representatives a bill providing that the Army should not be used except when there was positive authorization of law for it. The Democrats had a majority in the House then and the Republicans had a majority in the Senate; but yet that bill became a law, and it is on the statute book to-day. Nobody, I believe, would question it.

Mr. President, we must have an army, I suppose, and probably we shall always have some colored men in it as well as some men who probably ought to be dismissed, whether they be white or black; but there is one thing that ought to be understood, and that is that we have got to maintain the character of the Army for order and for decency, or else the time will come when the people of the United States will see to it that you do not have an army.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I will favor the substitute proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], I deem it proper to say that, while that is so, I do not agree with the Senator as to all the reasons which he urges in advocacy of that resolution. I agree that the President has the power. think, however, that he has the power subject to the lawmaking power of the land, and that he has no power in the command of the Army, except the right to be its commanding officer, which is not under the control of the lawmaking power.

I do not desire, Mr. President, to go into that, because I expressed my views—not at length, but succinctly—in the debate which I had with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] a few days ago, and since then the Senator from Ohio [Mr. For-AKER] has discussed the question with more elaboration. I simply mention it now in this connection in order that, voting, as I shall, for the resolution of the Senator from Florida, I may not be considered as agreeing with the proposition announced by him in regard to the source from which the President derives the power.

I am the more particular, Mr. President, to do so because I regard it as one of the gravest questions which could possibly be submitted for the consideration either of the President or of the Houses of Congress. I think if the President of the United States is not bound to recognize as meaning in its full extent what is recited in the clause which I read in the former debate to the Senate, that there is no limit to be set to his power in the use of the Army, except such limit as he himself may construe to be that limit. There is no place to draw the line. will again read the section of the Constitution upon which I base my contention. In the enumeration of the powers of Congress there is, in the first article of the Constitution, this sen-

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

I believe that to be a grant of power without limitation. believe it to be a grant of power intended to be exclusive of the exercise of that power by any other department, unless with the consent and under the direction of the lawmaking power.

Mr. President, the other day when I announced that view the Senator from Wisconsin said that he had heard me make that speech before. I do not think there is anything to be gained in iteration and reiteration, but there are some things so essential that their assertion can not be made too often, certainly not too often whenever there is any contradiction of them, and if it be necessary daily to make assertion in favor of the exercise of the power of the lawmaking department of the land and in contravention of the claim of the exercise of the power by any one man, then it can not be made too often if it is made every day. And, Mr. President, I want no higher encomium, so far as my public career is concerned, than that I was always opposed to the exercise of one-man power and in favor of the exercise of power by the legislative department, which the Constitution set up for that purpose. That is the branch of the Government which is the distinctive republican feature. Both the executive and the judicial departments are found even in unlimited monarchies where the legislative branch is frequently wanting. But, Mr. President, I shall not dwell upon that.

I want to say something with reference to the propriety of the adoption of the substitute proposed by the Senator from Florida. This matter originally was brought before the Senate by resolu-tions—I am speaking now of when it was first brought here to the Senate-by resolutions which reflected the sentiments of those who condemned the action of the President. That condemnation was put upon several grounds. In the first place, that, as a legal proposition, he had no right to make the order discharging the soldiers of these three negro companies; that he had no right to discharge without honor; but that that was the function of a court-martial. In the second place, that the order involved the innocent as well as the guilty. That as a question of law it should be said that the President had no right to make the order, and that in the exercise of the power, whether he possessed it rightfully or not, there was injustice done by indiscriminately confounding the guilty with the inno-Those are the two propositions, and around those two propositions this debate for weeks has revolved.

When that proposition was first announced there was no doubt about the fact that there was a distinct cleavage in the Senate, not only among the Democrats in some degree, but in a still more pronounced manner among the Republican Senators. There were Senators who did not believe that the President had the power, whether he drew it as an inherent power from the Constitution or whether he received it by power granted by Congress. There were other Senators on the other side of the Chamber who believed directly to the opposite, that the President did have the power, some of them thinking that it was a power drawn directly from the Constitution and others thinking that it was a power granted to him by the action of Congress, or at least not denied to him, and in the exercise of the usual functions of every commanding officer.

Mr. President, Senators on the other side of the Chamber are to-day giving an illustration of their extreme dexterity in framing measures for which they can all vote, although among themselves directly opposed in sentiment and opinion as to the matter to which the measures relate. The Senators who believed in the beginning that the President did not have the power, from whatever source it was derived, to promulgate that order, believe The Senators who in the beginning believed that the so to-day. President did have the power, believe so to-day. They are in opinion divided as distinctly and as radically as they were two weeks ago, and yet they have agreed upon-I say they have agreed, but possibly all have not-but, speaking generally, it is understood that they have agreed upon a resolution for which they can all vote. Why? Because it is a resolution framed in ambiguous language, under which those who believe that the President did have the power can construe it according to their opinion and vote for it, and those who believe that the President did not have the power can also construe it to mean their way and vote for it.

Mr. President, I am not saying that haphazard; I am saying it because Senators have so announced on the floor. ceed to read to show that Republican Senators on the one side and the other of this contention have so stated.

Senators will remember that on yesterday when the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] was on the floor giving reasons why he would support the modified resolution which had been introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which is in these words:

Resolved, That without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto, the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, etc.

I asked the Senator from Massachusetts whether that meant the same thing as the amendment which had been offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which is in these words:

Without questioning or denying the legal right of the President to scharge without honor enlisted men from the Army of the United

And the Senator from Massachusetts made a reply, to which I rejoined as follows:

Mr. Bacox. So I understand, then, that the Senator construes the modified substitute proposed by the Senator from Ohio to mean all that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky means and to go still further?

Mr. Lodge. I do.

That was as emphatic and as explicit and as unqualified as the Senator could make a reply in language. The Senator from Ohio was not content with the answer made by the Senator from Massachusetts, so he interjected:

Mr. Foraker. I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that, according to my understanding, the two amendments do not mean the same thing.

There, in direct opposition, are the statements of the two Senators, and the Senate will remember that the Senator from Massachusetts had in this debate previously avowed his opinion that the President did have the power, and that the Senator from Ohio had as emphatically and as explicitly avowed that, in his opinion, the President did not have the power. That was the condition before this resolution was framed, the modified resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio, and, as disclosed by that colloquy, that is the position they occupied after the resolution was framed.

In other words, the one who believed in the beginning that the President did not have the power avows that he believes so still, and the one who believed and had announced beforehand that the President did have the power announces that that is still his opinion, and yet the two Senators, directly opposed and in this avowal asserting still that opposition, agree upon that single resolution. Why? Because, as I say, the language is ambiguous. One Senator can construe it one way and vote for it and another Senator can construe it directly in the opposite and vote for it.

I read further to show that that is the construction of the two Senators

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. Let me read this first. On the same page the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] said:

The resolution as it stands

That is, the modified resolution-is absolutely satisfactory to me. It states-

Now, listen-

It states that we do not question the President's right either to discharge the troops or in any act relating thereto. Nothing can be plainer than that, in my judgment.

Now, in the same colloquy, on the next page, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] used this language. Without reading it all. I will read his concluding sentence:

In other words

Speaking of the modified resolution proposed by him-

In other words, the effect will be precisely the same as though we were to say "neither affirming nor denying the legality."

In one case the words "not questioning" are construed by the Senator from Massachusetts to mean there is no doubt about it, and in the other case the Senator from Ohio says that "not questioning" means that we are not passing on that at all, himself asserting that the reason why he does not pass upon it or does not favor a resolution which will admit of the construction put upon it by the Senator from Massachusetts is that he believes directly opposite to the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], with the candor which always characterizes him, says that he believes that this "not questioning" means that it is beyond question, and not to be doubted or denied.

Mr. President, I am very much in sympathy with the suggestion made, I think, first by the Senator from Wisconsin and repeated by the Senator from Colorado to-day, that the investigation is, from some points of view, not a proper thing for us to make, and I would be willing to pass it without any resolution whatever and leave it where it is. But the Senate does not propose to do that. Here, with a challenge in the Senate as to the power of the President to discharge these soldiers, as to the propriety of it, this resolution proposes to pass that challenge and at the same time pursue the course which is proposed by those who deny the right, to wit, to make an investigation for the purpose of establishing the propositions which were announced originally in the resolution, that the President has not the right, and if he has the right that it has been improperly

I have no interest in this matter so far as it may relate to the personality of the President. Certainly if he is willing that those who particularly represent him in this Chamber shall agree to an ambiguous resolution, to a resolution the language of which can be construed directly the opposite by those who support him and by those who oppose him, a resolution not only susceptible of that, but as to which Senators on this floor announce these opposing views—if the President is content with that, it is not for me to stand in the breach or to attempt to do so in his defense. But there is a great question and a great principle involved which goes beyond the question of the personal fortunes of any man who may occupy the White House.

Mr. ALDRICH rose. Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Rhode Island will pardon me, I think it is a strained construction that action upon these questions is to be considered as an indorsement or condemnation of the Administration in other matters which have no relation to it whatsoever.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. With much pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to say that the question whether the President is content with this language should be the main question to be decided?

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the Senator plainly. I heard him partially only.

Mr. ALDRICH. Do I understand the Senator from Georgia to contend that whether the President of the United States is content with the language is the main question to be decided by the Senate?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Rhode Island could scarcely have heard any words from me which would be susceptible of any such construction. On the contrary, I said it was a question far superior to the personal fortunes or the personal wishes of the President: that if the President is content with the resolution as it has been drafted by his friends upon this floor, it did not become me to attempt to stand in the breach for the defense of his prerogative. I think I have made myself quite plain on that, and I flatter myself that my distinguished friend the Senator from Rhode Island had but one purpose in asking me the question, and that was to enable me to emphasize what I had said to the contrary of what he suggested. however, a most remarkable fact that through the dextrous management of somebody on the Republican side, all of the adherents of that party in this Chamber have been put in a position where, by agreeing to support a certain resolution, they will be compelled to vote against an unreserved and unlimited endorsement of the President's action, as expressed in the substitute of the Senator from Florida.

But, Mr. President, I was saying that this is an important question. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] in his speech yesterday said that southern Senators had tumbled over each other, or he knew they would tumble over each other, to go to the defense of the President in this case, because they were opposed to having any negroes in the Army at all, thereby, I think, impugning motives and the good faith of those of us who occupy that position, not intentionally, of course.

Mr. President, I desire to say frankly that when this debate began I very gravely doubted the right of the President to make the order, and if the inclination of my mind had continued I should have voted in favor of saying that he did not have the right to make the order. It had never been my fortune or duty to examine particularly law questions relating to the Army, especially as to the effect of Army regulations and the rules for the government of the Army, and the first inclination of my mind and impression, I may say, was that in discharging without honor the President had inflicted a punishment, and I did not believe that in that case or any other it was according to the genius and spirit of our law, to say nothing of its explicit provisions, that any one man should have the right to be judge and jury and executioner.

It was only after the debate had progressed, particularly after I had heard my learned friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] as to that legal proposition, that I became convinced that the first impression of my mind was wrong and that the discharge without honor is not a punishment; that it is simply the exercise of a power necessary in a great many instances and on a great many occasions, but particularly necessary as a fundamental proposition for the good of the Army, for the good of the public, and for the protection of the public, and that the discharging of a man without honor from the Army was no more than turning off a servant and failing to give a certificate of character. So the Senator from South Carolina is unjust, I say again, unintentionally so, in attributing any such disposition and unworthy motive to Senators on this side.

I wish to say that the reason why I desire that there shall be an expression of opinion in this matter is somewhat twofold. In the first place, I have no belief that there will be any other occasion which will furnish an opportunity for the Senate to say that it thought the President acted within his power and acted properly, and I am unwilling for the opportunity to pass without so saying.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. As I always do, with pleasure. Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator from Georgia to say that he is in favor of the Senate expressing an opinion, as this is probably the only opportunity which would be afforded for the Senate to do so. I understood the Senator a few moments ago to express very grave doubt as to the propriety of the expression of any opinion by the Senate as to the legality of the Executive act.

Mr. BACON. I did not express it quite so strongly as the Senator does. I did not say I very gravely doubted. I think my exact language was that I was very much in sympathy with the suggestion that there might be such impropriety in the general investigation proposed.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not the Senator just as much in sympathy with the suggestion that we ought not to pass a resolution approving expressly an executive act, with reference to his power, as he is with respect to one disapproving it? If it is proper to pass one approving it is proper to pass one disapproving. Is not really the right thing for the Senate to do—
Mr. BACON. Will not the Senator allow me to answer one question at a time?

Mr. SPOONER. I will add only this little question.

Mr. BACON. Well.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not really the proper thing for the Senate to do to express no opinion and to limit itself to an investigation of the facts? I think my friend-

Mr. BACON. You ask me a question, and then you go on to argue it.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. BACON. I would be more than glad to hear the Senator argue it afterwards, but I want the question and the argument

The Senator will remember that when I said that with reference to what was the inclination of my mind, or the presentation with which my mind was in sympathy, I accompanied it with the further statement that while that might be the proper course to pursue and might be the one which would most commend itself to my mind, that is to say nothing, that it was also true that the matter had been brought into the Senate by those who were hostile to the act of the President, and they had assumed two positions here. One was that there was no legal power vested in the President to issue the order, and the other was that in the issuance of the order and in the action taken under it there had been great injustice done to these men.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-

will yield to the Senator from Ohio in a moment.

Therefore I said that it was not proper that there should be an elimination of the consideration and enunciation by the Senate on the question of the existence of power, when the Senate proposed to adopt a resolution which was in furtherance of the motion of those who were unfriendly to this act, based upon the ground that it was an abuse of power, if the power existed, and that it confounded the guilty with the innocent. That was my proposition.

If the Senate is willing to accept what has been done by the President and say no more about it. I will join hands. But if you are going to say anything, then for reasons which I will give later if I have an opportunity, we ought to speak here emphatically as to the propriety of that conduct, both as to law and as to fact.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Do yield to the Senator from Ohio? Does the Senator from Georgia

Mr. BACON. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Georgia to say two or three times in the course of his remarks, and particularly just when I rose to interrupt him, that this question as to the power of the Executive had been introduced into the debate by those Senators who denied this power to the President, or words to that effect. I call the Senator's attention to the Record in that respect.

On the 19th day of December the President sent us his message transmitting information in answer to resolutions which had been previously adopted by the Senate. A motion was then made to refer that message, with all exhibits and documents attached, to the Committee on Military Affairs for consideration, and the committee was directed, in connection with that consideration, by the resolution which was then offered, which, of course, has not been adopted, if it deemed it advisable to do so, to take further testimony in regard to the discharge of the members of these companies.

What was before the Senate, therefore, was the President's message, coming up in the way I have indicated, and it was in that message that the question about the President's power was first raised, and it was because of what was said in that message that, in discussing the motion then offered, that question was properly up for discussion. In other words, the question was not introduced into this debate by Senators who questioned that power. I did not introduce it. My resolution then offered was modified, I believe, on the following day—it has been modified two or three times—but in every modification it has been restricted to an inquiry as to facts. But when it came up for consideration the next time, although it was confined strictly to facts, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] offered an amendment, which again raised the question of power; and then when it came up again after that had been withdrawn and was modified the second or third time, on the 17th day of this month, the question of power was again raised by the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn].

So it is. We have had that question and have had debate on that proposition, but the proposition itself was not embodied in the resolution I offered and was not precipitated in this debate by anything I said, except only what was in answer to what had been said by others. Mr. BACON. Of course, I do not want to misrepresent the Senator in any particular. Mr. FORAKER. I am sure of that.

Mr. BACON. And I will accept the full statement of what he said as to the particular way in which the matter came before the Senate. But I do not think there can be any question of the fact that the Senator from Ohio has been recognized as the champion, and the very formidable champion, the untiring champion, of these soldiers who have been thus discharged, and that he has been, with the utmost earnestness, constantly insistent upon the fact that the President did not have the power, and that he had exceeded his power.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not changed my mind about it.

Mr. BACON. He has not changed his mind, and in that connection he demands the investigation.

Mr. FORAKER. Of the facts.

Mr. BACON. Now, it makes no difference, so far as this particular presentation is concerned, whether he is the first one who brought it in issue in this Chamber, but he has based his most powerful advocacy of the cause of these colored soldiers upon the proposition which I have stated, that the President did not have the power, and even if he had the power it had been abused, in meting out punishment both to the innocent and the

Mr. President, when in the course of this debate as the matter goes along there is gradually an evolution in which there is an attempt to separate those two questions, with this assault upon the act of the President, this denial of the right and of the propriety of his action, and there is an endeavor made to break the force of what there might be in an indorsement of the act of the President, and simply a direction for an investigation at the instance of those who deny the power, while I am not an advocate or defender of the President, I say it is an injustice to the President.

Mr. President, what makes the matter important to my mind. again disavowing any effort on my part to stand as the champion or defender of the President, even if I had the adequate power to do so, is that there has never been an incident connected with the American Army in time of peace which has so challenged the attention and awakened the interest of the American people as this particular incident and the questions that grows out of it. I am very frank to say that there is not a section of the country in which that interest is deeper than in the section of country which I have the honor in part here to That section of the country is not inflamed, as the Senator from South Carolina would suggest, simply by the fact that this outrage was committed by negroes, and with hostility to the race, and for that reason, this attitude is assumed. The southern people have no such blind, unreasoning race hatred. It matters not whether they are white or black. The action was taken by a battalion of the United States Army, which was, as the President has denounced it, the most brutal act of savagery ever known to the American Army, and, I may say, the most brutal act of savagery ever known to the United States by any band of people legally organized together.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator, I know, does not want to misrepresent me. I did not say, because I have never thought it, that the attitude of the South toward the discharge of the negro soldiers was due to hatred of the race, but due to hatred of negro soldiers as negro soldiers because of the infamies perpetrated by them upon the southern people in 1866 and 1867.

Mr. BACON. I will accept the Senator's direct statement, in his own words. I say that is an injustice, and it matters not whether these men are white or black. I am frank to say that in my opinion the southern people think it better that for good reasons there should be no negro soldiers, and in that view I personally concur; but that is not the reason of the attitude of the South relative to this action by the President. It is a matter, after what has occurred, of the supremest importance for the peace and security of the country and for the confidence of the country in the fact that they will not be subjected to such outrages, to know, as alone it can know by the utterance of the Senate after what has occurred here, that the power does rest in the President, and that whenever a proper man is in that office it will be exercised promptly, without a word and without hesitation, to rob such men of the power to commit such outrages in communities in which they may be stationed.

That is the thing which makes it important, Mr. President, that the Senate, after the denial of that power, after the controversy that has been had here, after the attention of the whole country has been attracted to it, that these negro soldiers and white soldiers, knowing that that question is in issue and in the balance, shall not permit to go forth the impression that, after all, the Senate was in doubt and refused to say the President did right. For myself one principal objection that I had to the resolution of the Senator from Ohio was that it would deprive me of the opportunity to say to the country and to the Army that it was the opinion of the Senate that the President did have the power and had rightfully exercised it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does not the Senator think that it is of a great deal more importance that the people of the country should be made to understand that the law of the country, the civil law which deals with such crimes, shall not be interfered with by Executive orders, and that troops, black or white, who shoot up towns and murder citizens shall be subjected to those instrumentalities to detect the true criminals and punish them?

Mr. BACON. There are two questions in one, which I will answer. I think if the Senator from South Carolina or I had had the direction of those matters we might have pursued the course which would have more readily led to a detection of those who were guilty, and I wish to God they could be detected and could be hanged as high as Haman, as they ought to be, a spectacle and an example for all others who might so betray and abuse a trust as those soldiers did. But it does not end there.

Mr. President, in my opinion, if it could to-day be ascertained who these twenty men were, and if they could be hanged, as they should be, none the less would it be the duty of the President to say that the balance of these soldiers should no longer wear the uniform of the United States. Why? Because I myself have not the shadow of a doubt that every single enlisted man of those three companies knows who those guilty parties are, and any man who is familiar with the race characteristics will agree with me, I think, in greater or less degree as to the fact that there is not a man in either of these three companies who does not know who it is of his comrades who perpetrated this monstrous and unspeakable outrage of savage cruelty and brutality upon a peaceful community. And, Mr. President, if they know it, even though the guilty should have a greater punishment, they should no longer be allowed to wear the uniform of the Army, no not for one day or hour.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, and with that response that I think the Senator's suggestion does not controvene the propriety and correctness of the proposition which I make, that it is due to the country, that is is due to the future peace of the country, that it is due to the confidence which our people will have in troops stationed in their midst, that there should be an announcement in no uncertain terms by the Senate, after all this controversy and after all the attention which has been drawn to it, and after the direct challenge which has been made to the power, that, in the opinion of the Senate, the President had the power and properly exercised it.

I am glad of the opportunity, which I feared had been lost when it appeared we were going to vote simply upon the modified resolution of the Senator from Ohio, now presented for me to vote directly on that question. I wish Senators would have the nerve to let us vote on the question and not move to lay it on the table. Let us vote on it direct. Is it true that the President had the power and that he properly exercised it? If so, like men let us say so and not evade it and get under the cover of a motion to lay on the table.

If the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table is pressed, I hope it will be voted down, even by those who propose to vote against the substitute offered by the Senator from Florida, in order that unflinchingly we may face our duty and say to the American people and say to the American Army—for the future confidence and security of the public, on the one hand, and for the admonition and guidance of the Army, on the otherwhether we believe that the President under such circumstances has the power under the law to discharge summarily, and whether under such circumstances as this he has properly exercised it.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that my motion to lay on the table may be put.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]

Mr. MALLORY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the resolution may be read again. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment, at the request of the Senator from South Carolina.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert as a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio the following: Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate the recent action of the President in discharging without honor enlisted men of Companies

B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was within the scope of his authority and power and a proper exercise thereof.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the recent attack on the town of Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere; the expenses to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay the amendment of the Senator from Florida on the table.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALDRICH (when Mr. Allison's name was called). The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] is necessarily detained from the Chamber. He requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dol-LIVER], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Iowa [Mr. Allison].
Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scorr]. He is not on the floor, and I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KITTREDGE. By agreement I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and will vote.

Mr. MALLORY. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin], who, I understand, is not paired. I vote "nay."

So Mr. MALLORY'S substitute was laid on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask now for a vote on the main resolution. Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word before voting upon the main proposition, and to introduce a resolution, as a substitute, which I think more nearly conforms to the views that have been expressed on the floor.

In the first instance, I desire to say that I believe that with pen and paper I can generally make that paper reflect my own ideas and what I want to do in the matter of a resolution. want a resolution to say that I shall investigate a matter for a certain purpose I will be able to make that resolution declare the purpose for which the investigation is to be made; and if I intend that the investigation shall exclude some other purpose I will be able to so word the resolution that it will clearly exclude the thing I do not wish to have considered.

If I was going to do that I certainly would adopt a form of words which everyone must admit has practically, in the general use of the words, but one meaning. If I say to a Senator that I question his authority to act in a given way, he understands and I understand that that means that I have doubts about his authority; that I doubt it. If I say I do not question it, then it means that I have no doubt as to what was his authority. If I state in a resolution for an investigation of this matter that without questioning the authority of the President we direct that an investigation be made, that carries exactly the opposite meaning that it would carry if I said "questioning the authority of the President," which would mean doubting his authority we would direct the investigation.

Mr. President, as has been stated, and as I would at least draw the inference from the statement of the Senator from Ohio, he wants an investigation not for the purpose of determining whether or not the President has acted within his legal authority, not for the purpose of determining whether or not that action has been absolutely just, but for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not men connected with this division of the Army were guilty; and that is not all; not only for that purpose, but for the further purpose of ascertaining whether or not other than these twenty men were guilty.

There can be but one purpose in this investigation, and that is, first, to determine who are guilty and ought to be punished; second, to determine who are not guilty and therefore ought not to endure the punishment they are now suffering. If that is the object of the resolution, why not embody that object; and if, in addition to that, we want to eliminate the entire question of the authority of the President in the premises, so that we will not put ourselves on record one way or the other, either in affirming the fact that he has acted within his legal authority or by denying the fact of it, why not say so in so many words?

Mr. President, with that in view, and with the idea that we were not attempting to juggle with words in the matter of this investigation in order to make us all agree upon some point, I have prepared a further resolution. I do not think, as I stated before, that this matter is so important above all matters that we need to go outside of our regular use of language and adopt we need to go outstate of our regular use of language and author some character of questionable diplomacy to get all Senators to vote for the resolution, some understanding it one way, some understanding it another way, or assuming that it is to be understood in another way, when we all agree practically that it has but one meaning.

I believe, Mr. President, that after we have cast a vote upon this matter and have had our investigation, the good sense of the people of the United States will be such that none of them be fooled in the slightest degree by the language we have used, and afterwards we will resume our normal condition in the Senate, as that normal condition exists even to-day in the country. I for one will not attempt in any way to support a resolution designed to carry a meaning other than that which its words clearly imply.

Now, I ask for the reading of the resolution as a substitute. If the Senator from Ohio thinks it does not conform to his view, he can so state. He moved to lay upon the table a resolution that less nearly conforms to just exactly the opposite of his views than this one or any other one. Why? Because the res-olution of the Senator from Florida simply asserted the legal right of the President to so act. The resolution which has been adopted here by a few of the Senators not only asserts that the President acted legally, but it asserts that his act was a just act as well, without questioning either the legality or the justice of Therefore you admit not only that his act was legal, but also that in discharging all the soldiers guilty and innocent alike his act was also just.

I am not willing to go that far. I admit that the President of the United States probably could not have done otherwise than he did. He had before him a condition. The condition was that an investigation was made by the Army and it was without success. The matter was brought before the local au-thorities there. No indictments were found. He either had to continue those soldiers in the Army or dismiss them, waiting until some time in the future possibly he might get at the truth of the matter and then reinstate those against whom an injustice might have been done. From the arguments which have been given here it is certain that no two Senators would have done exactly the same under the conditions that confronted the President at that time.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the President of the United States would not have done what any one of the Senators would have done under like conditions. On my own part I think he acted honestly and justly, within his legal authority; but I do think that an injustice has been done to at least 137 or 147, or whatever the number may be, out of the entire battalion. I would rather not say in the resolution that no injustice has been done.

With that statement, Mr. President, I simply ask for the reading of the resolution I offer as a substitute, and then if the Senate desires to lay it upon the table they can do so, and I will vote for the other resolution, because I believe clearly that the President acted within his legal authority. I want an investiga-tion not so much to establish the guilt as to prove the innocence of those who I believe are suffering for an offense that they are not responsible for in any way whatever.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the Senator takes his seat will he allow me a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. BLACKBURN. Apprehensive that a motion may be made to table the resolution the Senator offers, I simply want to say that on yesterday I announced to the Senate my entire satisfaction with the resolution as offered in its latest form by the Senator from Ohio. I stand to that declaration now; and how-ever much any proposed substitute now offered may commend itself to my judgment, I will not depart from the announcement I made on yesterday of my perfect satisfaction with the resolu-tion now pending. I shall stand by it, and my votes will be tion now pending. I shall stand by it, and my votes will be understood in the light of this declaration.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly believe, Mr. President, that any Senator who believes that the President of the United States has acted within his authority and further believes that he has acted justly in this matter can conscientiously vote for the resolution in the form that it was presented here as a substitute yesterday.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President— Mr. ALDRICH. Let the proposed substitute be read.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the reading of the resolution I have offered as a substitute.

Mr. FORAKER. I will withhold the motion for that purpose. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Secretary read Mr. McCumber's substitute, as follows:

The Secretary read Mr. McCumber's substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That for the purpose of ascertaining what enlisted men or officers of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, were engaged in the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, or were accessories thereto, either before or after the fact, and also for the purpose of ascertaining what enlisted men or officers thereof were not implicated therein, either by overt act, assistance, negligence, or suppression of knowledge or information relating thereto, and wholly independent of the question as to whether the President of the United States acted within the scope of his constitutional and legal authority in discharging members of said companies, the Committee on Military Affairs be, and hereby is, authorized to make inquiry and to take testimony in regard to said affray, and that it be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers and administer oaths, and report thereon by bill or otherwise.

The committee or any subcommittee thereof is further authorized, if deemed necessary, to visit Brownsville, Tex., inspect the locality of the recent disturbance, and examine witnesses there.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the substitute on the table.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the proposed substitute upon the table. Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. I will withhold it for a moment.

I desire to take this occasion, Mr. Presi-Mr. HEYBURN. dent, to state my position in regard to this and the other pending resolutions. I think the Senator from North Dakota certainly has accomplished that which he says he professes to be able to accomplish, by stating in an affirmative manner the things that the committee proposes to do. But I do not think-I have not at any time thought—that I would support any resolution that undertook to inquire or promised not to inquire in affirmative terms into the action of the President of the United States. Ever since this discussion began I have been interested more in considering the question of the power of the Senate than I have in considering the question of the power of the President. I was convinced early that we had absolutely no power to investigate, to criticise, or to approve or disapprove the act of the President when that act was a completed act, and my opinion on that matter has not been changed. It would not be appropriate that we should, merely for the purpose of complimenting the President upon his action, indorse it. It is not appropriate that we shall take up official acts of the President to pass upon them either affirmatively or negatively, except that in doing so we are performing some legitimate function of this body.

I therefore was satisfied with the resolution as it stood upon adjournment on last Friday, which eliminated that question, and would have been justifiable upon the ground that either branch of Cengress may and should at all times inquire, through methods determined upon, into any condition of facts that may be useful for consideration in future legislation in regard to the subject of the inquiry. We may want to inquire in the future, near or distant, whether or not the Articles of War should be amended in order to meet such emergencies; but we can not, by any act of ours, undo or modify the completed act of the President.

Therefore I have objected and shall be compelled to express that objection by my vote to the words "without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto." The words "without questioning" are equivalent to waiving our right to question. That is the synonym given by the authorities. It is the recognized synonym for that word. It is equivalent to waiving our right to question. We have no right to waive; there is nothing to waive. It carries with it the implication that we have a right, if we should see fit to exercise it, and I can not concede that.

So I say that my vote will be governed more by the consideration of the powers of the Senate than by the consideration of the powers of the President. I shall not vote upon the powers of the President nor upon the question whether he has exercised them wisely or unwisely. I shall not vote upon the question as to whether or not he has exceeded his authority, no matter in what shape it may be presented in a resolution.

If this incident is of sufficient importance as to promise profitable results from an investigation of those occurrences for our future use, to have on hand, if I may use the expression, in the event that we should take up the consideration of the question of a revision of the Articles of War or military law, well and good; let us investigate; but if it is for the purpose, directly or indirectly, or by implication or otherwise, of criticising the President, then I shall vote against all resolutions. I shall be compelled to vote against any resolution that would intimate that we had a right to inquire into this matter at all or that we needed to do it.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the proposed substitute on the table.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FORAKER. I will withhold the motion if the Senator desires.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I do. Mr. President, I think it very clear that under the programme manifestly agreed upon the substitute proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] will be tabled, and that the reconstructed resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] will be adopted. For my purpose, I accept that situation.

I desire to say a word, Mr. President-and I will only occupy the time of the Senate a very few moments—about the compromise resolution before it is finally adopted. But, before doing that, I wish in passing to advert for a moment to that part of the speech made on yesterday by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], which he has eliminated from the RECORD. I do this that I may say in the open Senate that, although I am as sensitive as most men, I did not feel offended at what that Senator said of me. Without assuming to pass on the merits of the Senator's composition or the timeliness of his utterance, I regarded what he said as an effort at facetious-ness and good-natured humor. I was not offended, because I was sure no offense was intended. I venture to say, Mr. President, that except for the gravity with which the Senate treated the incident no importance would have been attached to the Senator's deliverance. The solemnity of the Senate's action gave to a trivial circumstance its only dignity. I could not have congratulated the Senator perhaps for making such a speech in this presence, but having made it, I do regret that it has been withheld from the RECORD-and this I say, despite the opinions to the contrary of our elder statesmen, whose judgment on Senatorial proprieties I regard, as in duty bound, with deference. There is an old saying that

A little nonsense now and then Is relished by the wisest men.

I am not sure that I have the quotation exactly right, but it

Mr. CLAPP. "By the best of men."

Mr. STONE. My friend from Minnesota suggests that the quotation should be "best of men" instead of "wisest."

Mr. CLAPP. "Best" is the proper word.

Mr. STONE. Of course the proprieties of debate should be observed and the business of the Senate orderly conducted, but I should hate to see the Congressional Record converted into a ponderous tome of platitudes without a sparkle of fun or flash of humor to relieve its dull monotony. If ever it is to be read by anybody except some patient digger after serious data, there must be something in it to tempt the lips into smiling or the heart into quicker beating. Although the first effort of the Senator from South Carolina to be humorous was not a shining success [laughter], I can not but hope that he will abandon his announced resolution never to try it again. That first effort created such a stir in the Senate and in the world that there is no telling what he might accomplish with patient practice and a little softening of his tone. No one can measure the possibilities of the Senator in this direction. [Laughter.] If he adheres to his resolution to quit, who can tell what a light the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] and the Senate snuffed out on yesterday; a light, it may be, that would have warmed the world into laughing if only it had been permitted to burn. I devoutly hope the Senator from South Carolina will reconsider his resolution, and again and again illuminate the RECORD with the scintillations of his wit. If he does not, there is no telling how deep the grievance may be which posterity may justly hold against this Senate. With this hope and invocation, Mr. President, I leave this weighty matter with the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. President, a word now, and only a word, about this newly constructed resolution. It is manifestly a compromise between the warring factions on the other side of this Chamber. When I addressed the Senate several days ago I predicted that their differences would be adjusted and a compromise resolution agreed upon. This eventuation should establish my claim to prophesy. The Senator from Ohio, speaking for the "antis," and the Senator from Massachusetts, speaking for the President, have shaken hands across the bloody chasm, and the cohorts of both are at peace. But, Mr. President, although everybody is agreed, we know that nobody is satisfied. It is a drawn battle. But then, Mr. President, our friends over there are at peace. Watching and waiting with muffled daggers, they are at peace; but with the next gale that blows from the White House we may again hear the clash of resounding arms. Happily this investigation is to go on, and the end is not yet. I am for the investigation, Mr. President, wholly, as a matter of course, from disinterested, unselfish, and purely public considerations; but while I shall cheerfully vote for the resolution, I desire to say that I for one do question the legality but not the justice of the President's act in disbanding the battalion in question as he did. I shall vote for the resolution, but I wish now in advance to avow that in doing so I do not commit myself to the proposition that the President, in all respects, acted within the limits of his constitutional and legal powers. I do not think he did. At the same time I think it perfectly clear that the Senate can not revise or modify, much less revoke, the orders or acts of the President, and this is true whether the orders or acts of the President were legal or illegal. But the Senate has an undoubted right to make this investigation for its own information and for its own purposes. This much I desired to say, Mr. President, and no more.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the substitute offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] on the table, and on that I ask for a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the proposed substitute offered by the Senator from North Dakota on the table.

The motion was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, I feel it my duty to offer a substitute for the resolution which has been agreed upon by certain Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I will read the proposed sub-

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate the President was authorized by law and justified by the facts in discharging without honor, with only the legal consequences incident to such discharges under existing law and Army regulations, the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, on account of occurrences at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906, and subsequently.

Mr. President, it will be remembered by perhaps all Senators present that for several days prior to the meeting of the Congress it was suggested in the newspapers of this city that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] intended to offer in this body a resolution of inquiry questioning and attacking the discharge of this battalion of infantry by the President. Notwithstanding that publication and the apparent foundation for it, on the first day of the session of the Senate, December 3, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], with manifest haste, proposed a resolution of inquiry on the subject. We were informed by the press that it was done on the part of the Administration, so that whatever inquiry was made with reference to this transaction should be made by the friends of the President.

On the same day, December 3, but subsequently, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] offered his resolution of inquiry. It was modified on December 4 and modified again on December 5. On December 5 the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, also offered a resolution on the same subject, and on the 6th day of December the Senator from Ohio, from his place in this Chamber, not only attacked the validity of the act of the President, but the sufficiency of the testimony upon which it was based. I read from the RECORD, on page 105:

Said the Senator from Ohio-

The broader question is one of constitutional right. The President does have power, as the Secretary of War says in the statement published in the papers this morning, to grant discharges without honor in contradistinction to discharges that are dishonorable and to discharges that are honorable. But running through all authority, and necessarily so because of the spirit of our institutions as well as the letter of the law, is this rule, that no such discharge can be granted by any order, from the President down, when it rests upon a conviction of a felony punishable with imprisonment in the penitentiary under the laws of the United States and when as a result of such discharge punishment is inflicted as though it had been in pursuance of the sentence of a courtmartial.

Whenever it comes to the point where men are charged with the martial.

Whenever it comes to the point where men are charged with the commission of a criminal act they are entitled to a trial before they are condemned, and they have that right, although they may be enlisted men in the Army of the United States. They have it under our constitutional guaranties, and they have it according to the letter of the statute that is applicable. I shall point out, when the proper time comes, that the Congress of the United States has been careful, in enacting the Articles of War and other statutes for the government and regulation of the Army, to provide that there shall be no conviction of any enlisted man of any offense upon which a discharge can be predicated until he has had a trial before a court-martial or some other duly constituted tribunal.

So we have, Mr. President, the friends of the Administration in this Chamber seeking at the outset to take charge of this inquiry in preference to the Senator from Ohio, who announced that the President acted upon testimony insufficient and flimsy and in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Now, what else? On December 19 the Senator from Ohio modified his resolution, or rather submitted another one. December 20 he modified his last resolution, and on the 3d of January, Mr. President, when the Senate reconvened after the holiday recess, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodgs], representing the President, sought to ingraft an amendment upon the resolution of the Senator from Ohio by inserting, after the word "discharge," the words:

By the President of the United States in the exercise of his constitutional and legal authority as Commander in Chief.

There we see the race between the leading opponent of the Administration on this subject and, as we have been told, the best friend of the President in the Senate. Not only that, Mr. President, but the Senator from Massachusetts, as I have shown, insisted upon an amendment which would justify the legal position of the President.

Without following in detail the various resolutions and amendments further, I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that subsequently the Senator from Massachusetts withdrew his amendment, retreated from his position of expressly justifying the President under the law, and the Senator from Ohio introduced still another resolution, which went further than his original one, further in that all the other resolutions authorized the committee to make this inquiry, whereas this one on the part of the Senator from Ohio not only authorized but directed the committee to make the inquiry, taking away their discre-

What does all this signify? At the outset the friends of the Administration assumed charge of the inquiry. Later the Senator from Massachusetts, the personal friend of the President, sought by amendment to justify his act as to the law. this was abandoned and the resolution of the Senator from Ohio was made wide-reaching both as to law and as to fact.

More than that, Mr. President. Instead of taking charge of the inquiry, instead of justifying the legal position of the President, the forces of the Administration in this Chamber have surrendered on the law and permitted the inquiry to pass under the absolute control of those who are leading the fight against this act of the President.

Then came the amendment suggested and proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], which in itself was an advance, it is true, but the merit of which has been largely subtracted from by the absence of the words "or denying."

Now, what we propose, at least what I propose, though I be the only Senator who will vote for it, is, after the full discussion of the constitutional and legal powers of the President, after the full and exhaustive inquiry into the facts, and after that authority has been challenged and the propriety of the act has been questioned, to pass the substitute resolution justifying the act in law and sustaining the act under the facts. Mr. President, only a word more, because I recognize in a degree the impropriety of speaking at this hour. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Telber] has suggested that we want the testimony. There was an inquiry by Major Blocksom. was an inquiry by the grand jury of Cameron County. was an inquiry by General Garlington. There has been a sub-sequent inquiry by the Department of Justice. There has been an inquiry exhaustive and lengthy by the friends of these soldiers—the Constitutional League of the State of New York. Every person in Brownsville or contiguous thereto who knows anything about the facts in this case, every officer, whether commissioned or noncommissioned, and every private soldier stationed at Brownsville has either made a statement or made an affidavit in this case.

Let me call attention to the fact that under Major Blocksom's report the affidavits of the noncommissioned officers were taken as well as the statements of the five commissioned officers. Under Colonel Lovering's report, which I had almost forgotten, first, there was the sworn testimony of the commissioned offi-cers; second, the sworn testimony of the soldiers, running from page 114 to 163, inclusive, and third, the affidavits of the soldiers. from page 163 to page 174, inclusive, as shown in the Senate document. Under General Garlington's report, first, the accused soldiers who were under arrest were carefully examined at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; second, many of the men were examined at Fort Reno, and third, all of the officers and enlisted men of the battalion were paraded at Fort Reno and asked to make statements. As taken by the Constitution League of the State of New York, what testimony is here on the part of these The affidavit of every soldier connected with this soldiers? battalion at Fort Brown will be found from pages 222 to 234, inclusive, of Document 155, published by the Senate.

So, recapitulating somewhat what I have said, we have the testimony of the commissioned officers; we have the testimony of the noncommissioned officers; we have the testimony of every private soldier; we have the testimony of every citizen in and about the city of Brownsville who knows anything in the world about this question.

I have here, Mr. President, a telegram from Capt. William Kelly, of Brownsville, which I will read. He was the chairman of the citizens' committee of that city, is a Republican, and was an officer on the Union side in the civil war. It is directed to me from Brownsville, Tex., and dated January 15, 1907:

Our people believe no additional facts obtainable by further investiga-m. Purdy exhausted every clew.

WILLIAM KELLY, Chairman of Committee.

For these reasons, Mr. President, which I have hurriedly presented, I feel it my duty to offer the substitute in lieu of the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio, so that this incident, so far as the Senate and the discharge of these soldiers are concerned, will be closed. It will not be closed so far as the soldiers are concerned, because the President has declared that it is open to any man to show that he is not guilty either of participation in this crime or of having knowledge of the guilty parties, and that when such a showing is made to him he will permit a reenlistment under the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson].

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That in the judgment of the Senate the President was authorized by law and justified by the facts in discharging without honor, with only the legal consequences incident to such discharges under existing law and Army regulations, the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, on account of occurrence at Brownsyille, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1906, and subsequently

Mr. FORAKER. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

S. R. 13. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to award the Congressional medal of honor to Roe Reisinger.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if points of order have been reserved?

Mr. COUSINS. They have. Pending that motion, Mr.

Speaker, I wish to make a proposition for unanimous consent. I will ask if Mr. Howard, of Georgia, is present, and if not, I will inquire of Mr. Flood, of the minority of the committee, how much time is thought necessary for general debate on that side?

Mr. FLOOD. I think that Mr. Howard thought that an hour and a half would be ample.

Mr. COUSINS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this measure may be terminated in three hours, one-half of the time to be controlled by the leader of the minority of the committee on that side and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Cousins was then agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, with Mr. Sterling in the chair.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, this measure proposed by the committee carries a total of $3,138,477, which is $67,816 less than the bill of last session and $146,000 less than the estimate. The occasion for the reduction in this measure below that of the former measure is largely represented in one item of that act. The fact that we purchased or provided for the purchase of the legation premises at Constantinople at the last session at a cost of $150,000 naturally makes the necessary appropriation this year less than that of last year. There are a few items of increase, however, proposed in this measure which I shall very briefly explain.

The most important matter of legislation is the proposed increase in salaries of certain ministers now receiving less than $10,000 a year. There are quite a number of these cases. is a prevailing opinion in your committee, and I think in this House, that our diplomatic positions should not all be commanded by millionaires, and in order that representative citizens of the middle classes, coming from the people of the country, may be enabled to occupy these positions, it is necessary, as you will all agree, I think, that at least their expenses should be paid. In many of the legations at the present time the $7,500 salary is not sufficient to meet the expense. Your committee believe that men who are competent and worthy to represent this Government should not only have their expenses paid, but that they should receive at least a fair compensation for their time and services. Therefore your committee have agreed with the recommendation of the Secretary of State that these positions below $10,000 should go into the ten-thousand class. At present we have three classes, so far as salaries are Six of our ministers receive $12,000. Seven receive concerned. $10,000 salary, and fourteen of them receive only $7,500. I shall not at this time go into details concerning any of these missions, nor offer special reasons in the several cases until we reach the items on reading the bill.

There are a few other propositions that your committee deems of importance. There is the increase for additional interpreters. The Department has the very best information that the service is very greatly crippled or embarrassed by reason of not having sufficient interpreters. There is another important proposition involved in the bill which your committee offers, and that is this: In the last appropriation bill the allowance for clerk hire was divided into two different sums.

Clerk hire for one hundred and sixty odd of these consulates was provided for specifically and about 128 of the smaller consulates were provided for in bulk, to be paid in the discretion of the Secretary of State. Under the rulings whenever an amount of money is specifically appropriated for clerk hire at certain named consulates, it must all be paid at the particular places named, even though the necessity for it might not exist at the end of the year or at any time during the year. Your committee, after thinking the matter over carefully and considering it well. and without any suggestion of the Department on that particular subject, concluded that it would be wise to put the entire appropriation for clerk hire in the discretion of the Secretary of State, so that the Department can apportion it wherever the actual need occurs during the year, as it does now among the 138 minor consulates, thereby making the administration more flexible, and if all of the money appropriated for particular consulates for clerk hire is not needed in that particular year, that it may be used at some other place to greater advantage, thereby putting the responsibility upon the State Department, for we are necessarily dependent for our information in regard to the necessities of the service upon the State Department. Therefore it has been considered best by your committee to put the responsibility on the Department and let them use the money appropriated for clerk hire to the best advantage.

There is practically no other innovation in the bill offered at this time. There is an appropriation recommended of $5,000 for a new cipher code. The code we are now using, I think, was made in 1874. It is practically useless, and it is said by those who ought to know that it is the belief of the Department that this sum offered to be appropriated, $5,000, will be saved in a single year by reason of the enonomy of a new system and a much more readily interpreted code. I think I have nothing further to say at this time.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I notice on page 3 that the minister resident and consul-general to the Republic of Santo Domingo is paid $10,000 and the minister resident and consulgeneral to Liberia is paid $5,000. Could the chairman of the committee explain briefly the condition in the difficulties or obligations of these two stations which seems to warrant so great a difference in the compensation?

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I have not thought that I should go into these particular missions in detail now, but I will answer the gentleman temporarily that the position at Santo Domingo is one of the most important from a diplomatic point of view in the service. It is one of the most expensive places to live; it is one of the most undesirable places for a representative to go. There is little of diplomatic importance at Liberia. It is a mere question of living there and having a representative there. In Santo Domingo everything excepting fruits and fresh meats is practically high—double in cost what it is in the United States—occasioned, no doubt, by the large import duties which they levy. Those import duties probably were not levied for the purpose of encouraging industries, but rather in times past for the purpose of being made away with by corrupt officials.

I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour, or so much thereof as he may desire, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, there have recently been made in the House and in the Senate several interesting speeches on the extent of the treaty-making power conferred in the Constitution of the United States upon the President and the Senate. In this discussion, however, there has been omitted one rather striking fact that I desire to call to the attention of the committee before proceeding to the larger discussion of the extent of the treaty-making power. is to-day no law upon the Federal statute books that enables the National Government to punish violations of treaty rights I hold it to be a position not to be controverted that to the extent that there is responsibility there ought to be power; and inasmuch as the National Government can and does confer rights upon aliens, it follows that it should have the power to enforce recognition of those rights and to punish any efforts to disregard them. If at any time some citizen of a foreign country resident in America should be injured or his rights violated, the foreign country would look not to the particular State where the injury occurred, but to the National Government for a redress of the wrong. been the history in the past and it will be so in the future. When this country was confronted by a claim by Italy, growing out of the disturbances in the State of Louisiana, Italy declined to receive the suggestion of the National Government that that was a matter that should be taken up with the State of Louisiana, and while the National Government did disclaim responsibility, it nevertheless made payment in satisfaction of that claim. During the term of President Harrison in a message to Congress attention was called to this absence of Federal law.

He said:

It would, I believe, be entirely competent for Congress to make offenses against treaty rights of foreigners domiciled in the United States cognizable in the Federal courts. This has not, however, been done, and the Federal officers and courts have no power in such cases to intervene, either for the protection of the foreign citizen or for the punishment of his slayers.

President Roosevelt has also called attention to the need for this legislation, saying that—

One of the great embarrassments attending the performance of our international obligations is the fact that the statutes of the United States are entirely inadequate. They fail to give to the National Government sufficiently ample power, through the United States courts and by the use of the Army and Navy, to protect aliens in the rights secured to them under solemn treaties which are the law of the land.

So far as his message seems to call attention to the need of giving jurisdiction to the Federal courts I am entirely in accord with him. So far as he suggests the need of giving powers to the Army and Navy in the matter I disagree with him, believing that there can be given ample power to the Federal courts to control the situation, and I accordingly introduced in the early part of this session the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 20540) punishing conspiracy to injure or intimidate any person in the exercise of a right under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That if two or more persons conspire to Injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, they shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

That is an exact copy of section 5508 of the Revised Statutes, except that it changes the word "citizen" to the word "person." It was held by the Supreme Court, in the case of Baldwin v. Frank, reported in 120 U. S., 678, that the word "citizen" in that section did not embrace an alien and that an indictment brought under that section which charged certain men with a conspiracy to deprive Chinese aliens, resident in California, of the right of residence there could not be sustained, because the word "citizen" was used in the narrow sense of citizen of the United States or of the States and not in the broad sense of "person;" but the court said that, while there was no law covering such an offense, Congress had ample power to provide for the punishment of an offense against rights given by treaty to aliens. Now, it is manifest that this may become at any time a very serious matter. I do not believe that we need to apprehend at present any difficulties, but the fact that there has been much discussion relative to the rights under existing treaties of aliens residing in America and that there have been, in certain parts of the country, pronounced views relative to the matter, make it evident that there may arise at any time a situation where irresponsible men, disregarding the law and the obligations imposed upon us toward aliens residing in America, might commit some act of violence, might do something that would involve this nation in a very serious controversy with some foreign power. For this nation, then, to be put in the humiliating posi-tion of being held responsible by another power for a wrong done upon an alien residing in America and yet be unable to punish the perpetrators of that wrong would be a matter of grave concern to us all and place America in a pitiful position in the eyes of the world. I am not one of those who believe that the treaty-making power is unlimited, and I shall take occasion later on to state my views relative to that power, but I plant myself upon this firm proposition, that to the extent that we can confer a right upon an alien, to that extent the National Government that confers it ought to have the machinery by which it can punish any violation of that right, and I hope that very shortly this Congress will consider the advisability of passing this or similar legislation. The bill is purposely drawn in general terms, so as to leave to the proper department the power to determine what rights can be conferred by treaty. Under it any man indicted would have the right to raise the constitutional question of whether the right that he is alleged to have conspired against is such a right as could be conferred by treaty, and it would thus enable the Supreme Court in any given case to determine how far the treaty power goes and what rights are conferred under any particular treaty, because I do not believe that there is anyone now who will seriously contend that the Federal courts have not the power to declare a treaty unconstitutional, the same as they might declare any law of Congress unconstitutional.

It is true that one of the most recent writers on the treaty-making powers, a gentleman who has gathered together much useful information and data concerning it, does doubt that power and bases the doubt upon the fact that Judge Chase, in rendering the decision in the case of Ware v. Hylton, said that if the court had the power it would not exercise it except in a clear case; and upon that filmsy ground he contends that the court itself has disposed of the idea that it would have such power, forgetful of the fact that that decision was rendered at a time when the Supreme Court had not determined its right to declare any law unconstitutional. And of course it is manifest that in regard to a treaty, as in regard to a law, even more so perhaps, the courts would be very slow to declare unconstitutional such a solemn compact. But that it has the unquestioned power no thinking man, acquainted with the theory of our Government, can long doubt.

And this brings me properly to a discussion of what rights can be conferred, because while I do not believe that the opinion gentlemen may have as to the extent of the power ought to in any wise influence their judgment relative to the proposition to give the National Government the power to enforce treaty rights, still it is probable that some, dreading the extreme power that is claimed under the treaty-making clause, would hesitate to give to the National Government the power to enforce offenses against such rights, because they think that even though the right may exist it ought not to be exercised.

In the House but a few days ago a very elaborate speech was made by my friend from Vermont [Mr. Foster] dealing with this whole question. I did not have the pleasure of hearing it, but I have read it with great care. It is full of learning, but it proceeds upon a theory of government to which I must give my most emphatic dissent. The gentleman in his remarks stated that he considered that the question of whether the treaty-making power rests in sovereignty or rests in grant is an immaterial question, or, as he puts it, an academic question. To my mind it is a fundamental question. Once admit that the treaty-making power exists not by virtue of the grant in the Constitution, but as an inherent part of the nationality of the United States Government, and you then admit that there is no limitation that can be put upon that power. If it is true the treaty-making power arises from the sovereignty of the nation, and if it be true that this nation has all powers that any nation can possess, then it must follow absolutely that the treaty-making power extends to every subject without regard to our division of powers among the States and the nation and among the different departments of the nation. It follows for this reason, because while the Constitution declares the power, the power is not born of the Constitution, but is born of a right inherent in national sovereignty.

Now, the fundamental mistake in that argument, as it is in many that proceed upon a similar theory, relative to power in the Federal Government not declared in the Constitution, is that the sovereignty of the American people rests in the National Government. The sovereignty of the American people rests neither in the national nor State governments nor in all together. It rests in the people, and only to the extent that they have given to the State and to the National Government a part of that sovereignty do those governments possess it. I can not state the case better than to quote a statement made by Justice Brewer in an address before the Virginia Bar Association, in which he says:

I fully believe that this nation as a nation has all the powers which any nation possesses, but I as fully believe that those powers are vested in the people and that only such as they have enumerated in the Constitution have they granted to the Government.

And again, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court in the recent case of Hodges v. United States, reported in 203 United States Reports, he says:

The National Government still remains one of enumerated powers, and the tenth amendment, which reads, "the powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people," is not shorn of its vitality.

In very truth it may be said that upon these two statements hang all the law and the prophets. They represent to my mind the right theory of this Government. The National Government has only the powers delegated to it. Now, it is true that the treaty-making power is delegated in general terms; but it is not the only power delegated in general terms. It says "that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur," and it also declares that "this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." In regard to treaties the phrase is used "under authority of the United States," and some have claimed that the words "under authority" give greater power than if the Constitution had said, as it does in regard to the laws, "in pursuance thereof." But the reason for using the phrase "under authority" is easy to be ascertained.

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution there were many treaties in effect. It was desired to validate all of these treaties and give them binding effect so far as they were in accord with the theory of the Government as set forth in the Constitution. If it had simply said "made under the Constitution" or "made in pursuance of the Constitution," it would have excluded treaties already in existence, and therefore there was used the phrase "under authority." It was not used in the sense of meaning that once you determine that the President and Senate had acted in making a compact with a foreign nation the question of its validity could not be raised. To assume that was to assume that the great fight in the Constitutional Convention had been waged in vain. They undertook to counterbalance the great States with the little ones. All the States were given equal representation in the Senate. They were given this as a safeguard against the fear that the great States would soon swallow them up. But as counteracting that there was given to the House of Representatives, which has its representation based not upon the State but upon population, the exclusive right to raise revenue bills, and it was further de-clared that no appropriation of money shall be made except by authority of Congress. Now, if the treaty-making power was given supreme power, it, in its power, could assert both of these prerogatives, and then we would have the Executive and simply two-thirds of the Senate (who might represent a minority of the people, because even to-day there can be found two-thirds which represent much less than a majority of the people) able to enter into treaties with other nations, by which this vital right given to the House of Representatives, to hold the purse strings of the nation, would be abrogated and done away with.

Most students of the Constitution now agree that the treatymaking power is limited by this right in the House of Representatives, though some insist that when a treaty requires an appropriation of money Congress is morally bound to make the appropriation, but this House has ever maintained the right to freely decide for itself whether the appropriation should be made, and one has but to read the elaborate reports of the House Judiciary Committee, written by that great constitutional lawyer, Randolph Tucker (H. Repts. Nos. 2680–2721) to have all doubts removed. And it is also generally conceded that what is especially prohibited by the Constitution can not be done under the treaty-making power. It is manifest that no title of nobility could thus be conferred. It may also be considered as settled that where the right to do a given thing is given to Con--as to coin money, regulate the militia, establish bank--Congress alone can act, and the treaty-making power can not touch such subjects. But while these limitations are admitted by all save a few extremists, it is now being urged that the tenth amendment is in no sense a limitation upon the treaty-making power. The basis for this position I am unable to find. As said by Mr. Tucker, "The instant it is admitted that the power has limitations, even as to what is rightfully subject to it, the question at issue is narrowed to determining all these limits on principles of justice and of fair interpretation of the Constitution."

There is no reason that is good in logic that I know of that justifies you in taking part of the Constitution as superior and above the rest of the Constitution.

The very fact that the tenth amendment was adopted after the treaty-making power was conferred would indicate that it was intended that that power, along with all national powers, was to be exercised subject to the reservation stated in the tenth amendment. When this amendment was proposed the friends of the Constitution declared that it stated nothing that was not already the law, but those who were fearful of the power that was being given to the National Government said: "If that is true, it could do no harm, and we insist on an affirmative declaration; and inasmuch as you have got in the Constitution as already drawn many affirmative declarations of the rights of the people, we insist on this additional one; we insist that except to the extent power is expressly given it is reserved to the States and people, respectively."

Now, the treaty-making power is unquestionably a very extensive one. It is unquestionably true that the very most pro-nounced evil in connection with the Confederacy as it existed, aside from its inability to tax, so necessary an attribute of a virile government, was its inability to enforce the treaties then made and existing with foreign nations. It is true that there was constant complaint on the part of the Federal Government that the States disregarded these treaty obligations, and it is true that some of the States claimed that, while the treaties might be morally binding upon them, they were not legally binding, and claimed the privilege to regard or disregard them, as they saw fit, That proposition was effectually denied when it was put into the Constitution that not only the laws, but the treaties, should be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitutions or the laws of the States to the contrary notwithstanding. That clause determined that question, and only that question. It determined that a legal treaty—that is, a treaty which is not ultra vires; a treaty made within the power-is the supreme law of the land. Nobody can dispute that. Nobody now claims that it is not. But it is the supreme law of the land in no other sense than any law made by Congress that is within its constitutional limitations the supreme law of the land. And the best proof of that fact is the fact that Congress can, by enactment, repeal a treaty. If a treaty possessed a power peculiar to itself, if the treaty rose superior to a law and was supreme in any other sense, then it would follow inevitably that, being superior to the lawmaking body, it could not be repealed by the lawmaking body, and only the power warranted in making the treaty would be warranted in annulling it. And yet the Supreme Court decided, in the Chinese-exclusion cases, that the acts passed by Congress, in so far as they were in conflict with the treaty then in existence with China, abrogated that treaty, the rule being that a treaty of later date abrogates a law in conflict with it and a law of later date abrogates the treaty.

Now, if the treaty has only the power and none other than the law, it becomes important to determine, as we have determined many questions relating to the power of legislation in Congress, what are the limitations upon it. This is not an easy task. It is easy in general terms to recite limitations, but it is exceedingly difficult to determine the exact line and say, "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." It is true that there has never been a treaty declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, although there have been very many reviewed by that Court, and it is true that some of the decisions of the Supreme Court as to one subject-matter would seem in their logic to carry the conclusion that the clause relative to the reserved rights of the States did not apply; because they have held that it is within the power of the treaty-making power to remove by treaty the alienage of a foreigner, so as to enable him to inherit and transmit real estate. I should have said, as an original proposition, that that was a matter that remained within the States. I should have said, as Mr. Bayard when Secretary of State said, that if the question was to arise anew, he doubted very much whether the Supreme Court would hold as it has held; but I am faced with the fact, I recognize that they have decided; and in Chirac v. Chirac, and in many other decisions by that court, they have held that a treaty which conferred upon an alien the right to inherit and dispose of real estate overrode any State law or constitution. I realize that in the first great case of Ware v. Hylton, the Supreme Court held that where the State of Virginia had passed acts escheating the property of aliens who were British subjects, and had also undertaken to put impediments in the way of their right to recover debts, that the treaty overrode those acts of the legislature and the constitution of the State of Virginia; but I am unwilling to concede any more in that line than needs to be conceded. The proposition that is involved in the present case, growing out of the controversy between Japan and California, is that the treaty-making power is not only able to remove alienage so far as it relates to residence, and so far as it relates to inheritance and transmission of property, but that it can go to the extent of conferring upon an alien every right enjoyed by a citizen of the United States or of any particular State. That I deny. It is manifest that no treaty could undertake to confer upon an alien the right to hold office within a State. is manifest that no treaty could confer upon an alien the right to the suffrage within a State; because, gentlemen, the treaty-making clause must always be held subject to the general purpose and scope of our Government, State and National. It is unthinkable that the makers of the Constitution, who were so careful to guard the powers of every particular department, to offer check against check, and counterbalance against counterbalance, were yet so impressed with the necessity of having facility of contract with foreign nations that they were willing to give to one man and two-thirds of the Senate present-not even two-thirds of all elected—the power to make a law that could override all State enactments and rule. The National Government could, if it saw fit, as it did see fit in the Chinese treaty, give to the citizens of a foreign country the right to education in the public schools of the National Government, because that is a matter that rests with the nation.

The burden is upon the nation in maintaining these schools, and it might be proper that the nation should impose the additional burden of education of aliens. But how can it be said, where the obligation is one that belongs to the State primarily, that is subject to the State's will, so subject that the State could to-morrow, if it saw fit, do away with its public-school system, make what appropriation it saw fit, or none at all, that the National Government could confer upon an alien such right? Once you concede that right, I see no reason in a logical way why you should not concede any other particular right that may be desired in regard to the internal affairs of a State.

Now, I desire to draw the attention of the committee to another argument, and I do it with a great deal of hesitancy and some reluctance. What I am about to say may seem foolish, and I confess it is novel. I am not satisfied in my own mind, but I am unable to detect the flaw in the logic if it be there. The Constitution provides that the President, with the consent of the Senate, may make treaties and also provides that "no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." Now, if this was all, it would be manifest that whatever agreement might be had with other nations would have to be had by virtue of a treaty made by the National Government. But this is not all. The prohibition upon the States to make treaties is contained in the beginning of section 10 of Article I of the Constitution, and in the last division of that section it is declared that "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, * * enter into an agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power." Of course it is clear that the negative form of this declaration admits the affirmative, and a State can with the consent of Congress enter into an agreement with another State or with a foreign power. But yesterday this House passed a bill giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between two of the Now, if an agreement can be made between a State and a foreign power, it follows that such an agreement must be one not included within the scope of a treaty, because a State is, as we have seen, prohibited from making any treaty.

That of itself is a further indication that the treaty-making power does not embrace all contracts of every kind which can be thought of between the people of one country and the people of What seems to my mind to have been the view of the makers of the Constitution was that the treaty power should relate to those subjects naturally belonging to treaties; relate to those subjects that pertain to the country as a whole. It was proper-aye, it was necessary-that one voice should speak as to its contracts with other nations when it spoke on behalf of all the people, and it was further manifest that when that voice spoke within its domain, the voice of every State must be silent, that no discordant note might be heard to limit or deny the solemn compact of the General Government. But it is evident that there are many things that may pertain peculiarly to one locality, to one section of the country, and to its relationship to foreign nations that do not pertain to the balance of the country and should not be embraced within a treaty. We have States adjoining Canada, we have States adjoining Mexico, and it might be proper-and I do not know but what it has been done: I was unable to find any case-for one of those States, by consent of Congress, to enter into an agreement with a foreign nation relative to such matter local to it. I even consider that this very subject-matter that has given rise to this discussion is a case that would more properly fall into an agreement between a State and a foreign power than it would under the treaty-making power. It might well be that one State would be willing to concede to the citizens of a foreign country the right of education within the schools of that State in consideration of the same right, for instance, being given to the citizens of that State in the country with which the agreement is made, but that the National Government should have the power to confer upon a foreigner a right which imposes an obligation not upon the nation, but upon an individual State, seems to me utterly illogical. There is to my mind a distinction in an agree-ment removing a disability from one creating an affirmative The Supreme Court has said, and therefore I accept it, that the treaty-making power can confer the right, or, to put it more accurately, that it can remove the disability of allenage so that the foreigner may inherit what he would inherit if it were not for his alien birth. That is simply the removal of a disability and confers no burden upon the State; it simply declares an equity, does away with the old harsh view that the outsider, the barbarian, as the Greeks called all that lived outside of their borders, should have no right of property within a state. Modern international law does not recognize such treat-It says foreigners should be treated in their rights of property as if they did not have the disability of alienage. To hold, however, that our treaty-making power goes to the extent of giving an affirmative right that imposes an obligation not upon the United States, but upon a particular State; that requires the taxation not of all the people; seems to my mind to carry it very much too far. This I do know, that if that be the extent of the treaty-making power, the sooner the people of the United States demand of their representatives in the other branch of Congress a strict and careful limitation of the contracts that are entered into with foreign nations the better. I hold very much to the theory that the less of contact between nations and the more of contact between people the better. I believe that a treaty does not always help, but is very apt to hamper, the friendly relations between nations. Certainly if the construction that is being put by the Administration upon this particular treaty be the true one, and I shall not discuss that question, though it seems to me to be open to much question, then it follows that a right that was not considered by the parties at the time it was given, at least not considered to the extent of having an express declaration about it, is liable to be made the cause of disturbing relations that have existed harmoniously for more than half a century between the two countries. a result flowing from ill-considered treaties is to be greatly deplored, and the people of America should demand of the treaty-making power the most careful scrutiny of any treaty entered into

Mr. Chairman, an examination of the decisions and the text writers on this subject will, I believe, confirm these views of mine. It so happens that the debates at the time of the adoption of the Constitution are singularly silent in regard to the matter, but when the Constitution came before the various State conventions for adoption there occurred considerable debate, particularly in Virginia. Patrick Henry, opposed to the Constitution, believing sincerely that it was robbing the States of all their rights and depriving the people of liberty, seized upon every possible thing as an argument against ratifying the Constitution. Among other things he took hold of the treaty-making power. He made then the very claim that is made by the advocates of an unlimited power now. He declared that the treaty-making power was sufficient to swallow up all the rights of the States and of the National Government; that all they needed to do was to enter into some agreement with a foreign country, and what they could not do by ordinary act of legis-lation they then became empowered to do. He was answered by Madison, Randolph, Nicholas, and several others of the members of the convention, and in answering him they declared that such reasoning was not warranted; that the treaty-making power was limited, must be considered as being subject to the express limitations in the Constitution, and further limited by the nature and character of our dual form of government. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster] quoted Calhoun as authority for his position. Some seem to think that because Calhoun enumerates certain limitations, therefore all other limitations not enumerated do not apply. This does not follow; because he does, in the enumeration of specific cases, also put as a limitation the nature and the character of our Government, and the Supreme Court, when quoting Calhoun in the case of Geoffroy v. Riggs (133 U. S., 258), a case growing out of the treaty made with France, where the court again confirmed the power of a treaty to give an alien the right to inherit and transmit property. said that the treaty-making power was not only limited by these express provisions, but limited "by the nature of the Gov-ernment itself and of that of the States." If it be limited by the character of the government of the States, what conclusion can you draw other than that the reserved powers of the States are a limitation upon the treaty-making power? For if it does not mean that, it means nothing.

I might continue to cite cases and writers, and I had originally intended so to do, but within a few days a gentleman of my city, a distinguished lawyer, the judge of our chancery court, and a professor in our law school, has delivered an elaborate lecture upon this subject. He has summarized so well all of the opinions of the writers, from the adoption of the Constitution down, that for me to undertake it would be either to repeat what he has said or to poorly do what has been superbly done. So I shall content myself with filing as a part of my remarks, with the permission of the committee, this elaborate lecture upon that question, and I trust the House will read it most carefully. I have spoken without manuscript, save a few notes, and of necessity have not therefore been always accurate or concise, but there will be found the exact quotations from the men who made the Constitution and from the great writers and judges who have construed it ever since. In conclusion, may I be pardoned for saying that it seems to me that in this day, when we are told that if the exigencies of the case demand it we must either give to the National Government more power or the National Government must in some way take it to itself, the House should view with particular care the claim that is being made that this power extends over all others. I utterly abhor the man who is so narrow, whose love of his State is so petty, that he can not rise to a realization of the obligations and duties imposed upon all of us as members of the nation, but I abhor in even greater degree the man who, out of pressure of the immediate moment, out of the exigencies of the case, is willing to twist and pervert the fundamental law of the land in order to have his way and in order to give the National Government unwarranted power. [Applause.] I believe more and more each day that the salvation of America and of America's people lies in getting back to the old doctrine of self-dependence and independence [applause], of teaching the people that not by statute can they be made upright, but out of themselves must come the grace that is to reform and redeem. I believe we must have the people check the constant tendency to put off somewhere else the doing of an obligation that rests at home. It has been my fortune in this House to frequently oppose the power of the National Government. Sometimes it may have seemed that in doing so I would wish to take away from it all of its real strength, but this is in no sense true. If I had been a member of a State legislature I should most likely have been just as pronounced in my opposition to much of the legislation there. I believe that the States should only do those things that the individual can not do, and that the nation should only do those things that the State and the individual can not do, and I always approach every proposition of legislation with a feeling of hostility. The burden is also he asks me to support it. The burden is also on the man proposing legislation when

I think we are a law-ridden Government. We have so much law that we have ceased to obey any law. Why, it has gotten to the point where our very notices give an indication of our disregard of the law. We publish not only that a thing is prohibited, but in order to make somebody really believe that we mean it we say that such and such a thing is positively prohibited, as if there could be degrees of prohibition in a law-abiding com-And it all grows out of the fact that we pass laws that result in bringing about a condition that, being obeyed, would not be livable under. It is one of the great eternal truths of life that the remote results of legislation are always greater, more far-reaching in their effect upon people, than the immediate results. We pass some act for a particular purpose, and after we have passed it for that purpose we awake to find that the effect of it is being felt in a hundred other directions that were never contemplated, and we are forced either to disregard the law or to repeal it, and then the inertia of Government in regard to the repealing of laws makes us disregard them, and we become a nation of lawbreakers.

Therefore I believe that one performs no higher duty than when he insists on the strict construction of powers; not with the idea of detracting from the vigor of the nation, but because he believes, as said by Justice Brewer, that this nation as a nation has all the powers that any people have, but that those powers rest with the people, and only to the extent that they have delegated them do they rest in the National Government, and that we have made provision for the extension of those powers; and because it would be better to wait until that extension was legally given and suffer the particular evil that exists than to disregard the highest law of the land.

Gentlemen, if you permit the disregard of your Constitution, how, in the name of common sense, can you expect the people to regard the law supposedly made under the Constitution? [Loud applause,]

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX.

In accordance with the permission granted me by the committee, I append the lecture delivered by Judge Shackleford Miller, of Louisville, Ky., before the Jefferson School of Law:

The recent disturbance in California, brought about by the action of the school authorities of San Francisco in closing the doors of the public schools of that city against Japanese students residing there, naturally provokes a discussion of the treaty-making power under the Constitution of the United States. The Japanese claim the right to attend the San Francisco public schools under the treaty of 1894 between Japan and the United States, which provides as follows:

"The citizens or subjects of either of the two high contracting parties shall have full liberty to enter, travel, or reside in any part of the territories of the other contracting party, and shall enjoy full and perfect protection for their persons or property. In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel, to the possession of goods and effects of any kind, to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise and the disposal of property of any kind and in any manner whatsoever which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation."

It will no doubt readily be conceded that the right of the Japanese students to attend the public schools must be founded upon this treaty right of residence or it does not exist. There is no other right or privilege mentioned in the treaty which could even be remotely claimed to embrace the right of attending the public schools. It would seem, however, that a fair construction of the treaty would searcely extend the privilege of the public schools of a State to unnaturalized foreigners. If the Federal Government had so intended, it is but reasonable to assume that the treaty selves and their children educated at the public schools and at the public expense.

But the larger question arises: Can the President and Senate constitutionally make a treaty with Japan that would confer this right upon the Japanese residents of California?

The answer to this question turns upon the extent of the treaty-making power granted to the Federal Government under the Federal Constitution.

This power is found in the following provision:

"He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and Constitution.

This power is found in the following provision:

"He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senate present concur." (Const., Art. II, sec. 2, cl. 2.)

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all the treaties made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary not-withstanding." (Ib., Art. VI, cl. 2.)

It may be interesting to consider briefly the origin of the clause and how it has been viewed in the light of American history.

NOT DISCUSSED IN CONVENTION.

Strange though it may now appear, the question of the extent of the treaty-making power was not discussed at all in the Federal convention of 1787. The right to enter into "treaties and alliances," under some slight restrictions upon treaties relating to commerce, was given to the Congress under the Articles of Confederation (art. 9). The clause relating to the subject of treaties originated in the "committee of detail" and in the later stages of the convention. Prior to that time the subject had not come up for action, but had only been referred to incidentally in the consideration and discussion of other subjects. It first formally appeared as the first clause of article 9 in the committee's report of August 6, 1787, wherein "the power to make treaties" was lodged in the Senate alone. (5 Elliott's Debates, 379.) After a short consideration on August 23, the clause was referred back to the "committee of detail;" but as that committee made no further report, the clause went to the "committee on unfinished portions," which reported it on September 4 substantially as we now have it, by transfering the power to the President, with the advice and consent of the ring the power to the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

At no time, however, did the convention discuss the scope or extent of the power; it merely considered the question as to where the power should be lodged—who should exercise it. The same is true as to the "Federalist," written in support of the proposed constitution while it was before the State convention for ratification. The authors of that able work confined their discussion of the subject of the treaty-making power not to its extent, but to an effort tending to show that it had been properly lodged in the President and Senate. (Nos. 64 and 75.)

But when the Constitution came on for ratification by the State conventions it was to be expected that its opponents would carefully scan it with the view of determining, if possible, precisely what powers the several provisions carried and what limitations they imposed.

The scope and extent of the provisions of the Constitution were more elaborately discussed in the Virginia ratifying convention of 1788 than in any of the other similar conventions.

In the Virginia ratification of 1788 it was strongly contended by Patrick Henry, William Grayson, George Mason, and the other leading opponents of the Constitution that the treaty-making power was unlimited and therefore unwise and inconsistent with the proclaimed theory of its friends that the proposed Federal Government was one of delegated powers, specifically defined or necessarily implied. In the course of the debate Mr. Henry said:

"We are so used to speak of enormity of powers that we are familiar with it. To me this power appears still destructive, for they can make any treaty.

"If Congress forbears to exercise it, you may thank them, but they

"If Congress forbears to exercise it, you may thank them, but they may exercise it if they please and as they please. They have a right from the paramount power given them to do so."

It fell to the lot of Madison, Governor Randolph, and George Nicholas to meet this argument, and in doing so Nicholas said:

NOT REPUGNANT TO CONSTITUTION.

"The worthy Member says that they can make a treaty relinquishing any rights and inflicting punishments, because all the treaties are declared paramount to the constitutions and laws of the States. An attentive consideration of this will show the committee that they can do no such thing. The provision of the sixth article is that this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land. They can by this make no treaty which shall be repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution or inconsistent with the delegated powers. The treaties they make must be made under the authority of the United States to be within their province. It is sufficiently secured because it only declares that in pursuance of the power given they shall be the supreme law of the land, notwithstanding anything in the constitution or laws of the particular States." (3 Elliott's Debates, 507.)

In closing the debate Mr. Madison said:

"I am persuaded that when this power comes to be thoroughly and candidly viewed it will be found right and proper. As to its extent, perhaps it will be satisfactory to the committee that the power is precisely in the new Constitution as it is in the Confederation. In the existing confederacy Congress is authorized indefinitely to make treatles. Many of the States have recognized the treatles of Congress to be the supreme law of the land. Acts have passed within a year declaring this to be the case. I have seen many of them. Does it follow because the power is given to Congress that it is absolute and unlimited? I do not conceive that power is given to the President and Senate to dismember the empire or to alienate any great essential right. I do not think the whole legislative authority have this power. The exercise of the power must be consistent with the object of the delegation. One objection against the amendment proposed is this, that by implication it would give power to the legislative authority to dismember the empire—a power that ought not to be given but by the necessity that would force assent from every man. I think it rests on the safest foundations as it is. The object of treaties is the regulation of intercourse with foreign nations and is external. I do not think it possible to enumerate all the cases in which such external regulations would be necessary. Would it be right to define all the cases in which Congress could exercise this authority? The definition might and probably would be defective. They might be restrained by such a definition from exercising the authority where it could be essential to the interest and safety of the community. It is most safe therefore to leave it to be exercised as contingencies may arise." (3 Elliott's Debates, 514.)

First IMPORTANT DISCUSSION. In closing the debate Mr. Madison said:

FIRST IMPORTANT DISCUSSION.

The Constitution went into operation in 1789. The first important discussion of the treaty-making power arose in connection with Jay's treaty concluded with Great Britain on November 19, 1794. It was approved by the Senate on August 18, 1795; proclaimed by the President on February 29, 1796, and this proclamation was communicated to both Houses of Congress on March 1, 1796. Money was necessary to carry its provisions into effect, and as money could be only appropriated by both Houses of Congress, differences of opinion at once arose as to the extent of the treaty-making power and the obligation it imposed upon the House of Representatives:

"On the one side it was maintained that the power of the President and Senate as to treaties was absolute, and that the House of Representatives was bound, under the Constitution, to make the appropriations necessary to carry the treaty into effect. On the other side it was contended that, under the Constitution, the consent of the House was requisite to pass appropriations to carry the treaty into effect, and that this was as much known to the other contracting party as was the consent of the Senate to the preliminary adoption of the treaty." (Wharton's Int. Law Dig., 17.)

On March 21, 1796, Jefferson wrote to Monroe, then in France, as follows:

"The British treaty has been formally at length laid before Con-

On March 21, 1796, Jeherson wrote to Monroe, then in France, as follows:

"The British treaty has been formally at length laid before Congress. All America is a tiptoe to see what the House of Representatives will decide on it.

"We conceive the constitutional doctrine to be that, though the President and Senate have the general power of making treaties, yet wherever they include in a treaty matters confided by the Constitution to the three branches of legislature, an act of legislation will be requisite to confirm these articles, and that the House of Representatives, as one branch of the legislature, are perfectly free to pass the act or to refuse it, governing themselves by their own judgment whether it is for the good of their constituents to let the treaty go into effect or not. On the precedent now to be set will depend the future construction of our Constitution, and whether the powers of legislation shall be transferred from the President, Senate, and House of Representatives to the President, Senate, and Piaminigo, or any other Indian, Algeriae, or other chief." (4 Jefferson's Works, 134.)

Henry Adams, a grandson of that stout old Federalist, John Quincy Adams, has written a life of Albert Gallatin, who was then a Member of Congress from Pennsylvania. In describing the debate in the House of Representatives, Henry Adams says:

CHECK ON TREATY-MAKING POWER.

of Congress from Pennsylvania. In describing the debate in the House of Representatives, Henry Adams says:

"The debate began on March 7, 1796, and on the 10th Mr. Gallatin spoke attacking the constitutional doctrine of the Federalists and laying down his own. He claimed for the House, not a power to make treaties, but a check upon the treaty-making power when clashing with the special powers expressly vested in Congress by the Constitution; he showed the existence of this check in the British constitution, and he showed its necessity in our own, for if the treaty-making power is not limited by existing laws, or if it repeals the law shat clash with, or if the legislature is obliged to repeal the laws so clashing, then the legislative power in fact resides in the President and Senate, and they can by employing an Indian tribe, pass any law under the color of treaty.

"The argument was irresistible; it was never answered; and, indeed, the mere statement is enough to leave only a sense of surprise that the Federalists should have hazarded themselves on such preposterous ground. Some years later, when the purchase of Alaska brought this subject again before the House on the question of appropriating the purchase money stipulated by the treaty, the Administration abandoned the old Federalist position; the right of the House to call for papers, to deliberate on the merits of the treaty, ento refuse appropriations if the treaty was from the merits of the treaty, even to refuse appropriations if the treaty was found to be clearly within the Constitution or with the established policy of the country, was fully conceded. The Administration only made the reasonable claim that if, upon just consideration, a treaty was found to be clearly within the constitution apowers of the Government, and consistent with the national policy, then it was the duty of each coordinate branch of the Government to shape its action accordingly. See the speech of N. P. Banks of June 30, 1868. Cong. Globe, vol. 75, appendix, p. 385."—(Life of A REASON FOR RESTRAINT.

"The Constitution thought it wise to restrain the Executive and Senate from entangling and embroiling our affairs with those of Europe. Besides, as the negotiations are carried on by the Executive alone, the subjecting to the ratification of the Representatives such articles as are within their participation is no more inconvenient than to the Senate. But the ground of this exemption is denied as unfounded. For example, e.g., the treaty of commerce with France, and it will be found that out of thirty-one articles there are not more than small portions of two or three of them which would not still remain as subjects of treaties, untouched by these exceptions." (Jefferson's Works, IX, 80.)

per found that out of thirty-one articles there are not more than small portions of two or three of them which would not still remain as subjects of treaties, untouched by these exceptions." (Jefferson's Works, IX, 80.)

The first formal treatise upon the Constitution of the United States was published by Judge St. George Tucker in 1803 as an appendix to his edition of Blackstone. In that work Judge Tucker says:

"Treaties, as defined by Puffendorf, are certain agreements made by sovereigns between one another, of great use both in war and peace. Of these there are two kinds: The one such as reenforce the observance of what by the law of nature we were before obliged to, as the mutual exercise of civility and humanity, or the prevention of injuries on either side; the second, such as add some new engagement to the duties of natural law, or at least determine what was before too general and indefinite in the same, to something particular and precise. Of those which add some new engagements to those duties which natural law imposes upon all nations, the most usual relate to, or in their operation may affect, the sovereignty of the state, the unity of its parts, its territory or other property, its commerce with foreign nations, and vice versa; the mutual privileges and immunities of the citizens or subjects of the contracting powers, or the mutual aid of the contracting nations, in the case of an attack or hostility from any other quarter. To all these objects, if there be nothing in the fundamental laws of the state which contradicts it, the power of making treaties extends and is vested in thee conductors of states, according to the opinion of Vattel.

"In our Constitution there is no restriction as to the subjects of treaties, unless perhaps the guaranty of a republican form of government and protection from invasion, contained in the fourth article, may be construed to impose such a restriction in behalf of the several States against the dismemberment of the Federal Republic. But whether this restriction may

"The President has power to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint ambassadors, judges of the Supreme Court, and, in general, all the other officers of the United States. On this subject there is a very striking and important difference between the Constitution of the United States and that of Pennsylvania. By the latter the first executive magistrate possesses, uncontrolled by either branch of the legislature, the power of appointing all officers whose appointments are not, in the constitution itself, otherwise provided for. On a former occasion I noticed a maxim which is of much consequence in the science of government—that the legislative and executive powers be preserved distinct and unmingled in their exercise. This maxim I then considered in a variety of views, and in each found it to be both true and useful. I am very free to confess that with regard to this point the proper principle of government is, in my opinion, observed by the constitution of Pennsylvania much more correctly than it is by the Constitution of the United States. In justice, however, to the latter, it might be remarked that, though the appointment of officers is to be the concurrent act of the President and Senate, yet an indispensable prerequisite—the nomination of them—is vested exclusively in the President.

"The observations which I have delivered concerning the appointment of officers apply likewise to treaties, the making of which is another power that the President has with the advice and consent of the Senate."—(2 Wilson's Works, 191.)

It seems strange that this total failure to discuss either the nature or extent of the treaty-making power in a formal set of lectures which covered the whole field of the Constitution, could be the omission of one extent of the treaty-making power in a formal set of lectures which covered the whole field of the Constitution, could be the omission of one who was a distinguished member of the Federal Convention of 1787, and a justice of the Supreme Court of the Unite

MUST BE SOUGHT FOR IN PRINCIPLE.

"The most general terms are used in the Constitution. The powers of Congress in respect to making laws we shall find are laid under several restrictions. There are none in respect to treaties. * * * To define them in the Constitution would have been impossible, and therefore a general term could alone be made use of, which is, however, to be scrupulously confined to its legitimate interpretation. Whatever is wanting in an authority expressed must be sought for in principle, and to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported we must carefully apply to it the principles of the Constitution from which alone the power proceeds. * * * "There is a variance in the words descriptive of laws and those of treaties. In the former it is said those which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution, but treaties are described as having been made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States.

"The explanation is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution is that at the time of adopting the Constitution to th treaties. In the former it is said those which shall be made in pursuance of the Constitution, but treaties are described as having been made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States.

"The explanation is that at the time of adopting the Constitution certain treaties existed, which had been made by Congress under the Confederation, the continuing obligations of which it was proper to declare. The words 'under the authority of the United States' were considered as extending equally to those previously made and to those which should subsequently be effected. But, although the former could not to be considered as made pursuant to a constitution which was not then in existence, the latter would not be 'under the authority of the United States' unless they are conformable to its Constitution" (p. 66).

In 1833 Judge Story published his "Commentaries upon the Constitution of the United States," in which he says:

"The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general, and it, of course, embraces all sorts of treaties, for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for alliances or success, for indemnity for injuries or payment of debts, for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purposes which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may dictate in their infercourse with each other. But though the power is thus general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination of it and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constit

"More general and extensive terms, also, are used in vesting the power with respect to treaties than in conferring that relative to laws; and, while the latter is laid under several restrictions, there are none imposed on the exercise of the former, notwithstanding it is committed to the President and Senate, in exclusion of the House of Representatives, and is executed through the instrumentality of agents delegated for that purpose. And, although the President and Senate are thus invested with this high and exclusive control over all those subjects of negotiation with foreign powers, which in their consequences may affect important domestic interests, yet it would have been impossible to have defined a power of this nature, and, therefore, general terms only were used. These general expressions, however, ought strictly to be confined to their legitimate signification; and, in order to ascertain whether the execution of the treaty-making power can be supported in any given case, those principles of the Constitution, from which the power proceeds, should carefully be applied to it. The power must, indeed, be construed in subordination to the Constitution; and, however in its operation it may qualify, it can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions, nor can it ever be so interpreted as to destroy other powers granted by that instrument." (2d ed., 228.)

any other of its fundamental provisions, nor can it ever be so interpreted as to destroy other powers granted by that instrument." (2d ed., 228.)

Probably the best attempt at formulating a general rule for the exercise of the treaty-making power is that framed by Mr. Calboun, in 1851, in his "Discourse on the Constitution and Government of the United States." It reads as follows:

"Although the treaty-making power is exclusively vested, and without enumeration or specification, in the Government of the United States, it is nevertheless subject to several important limitations. It is, in the first place, strictly limited to questions inter alios; that is, to questions between us and foreign powers which require negotiation to adjust them. All such clearly appertain to it. But to extend it beyond these, be the pretext what it may, would be to extend it beyond its allotted sphere, and thus a palpable violation of the Constitution. It is, in the next place, limited by all the provisions of the Constitution which inhibit certain acts from being done by the Government or any of its departments, of which description there are many. It is also limited by such provisions of the Constitution as direct certain acts to be done in a particular way, and which prohibit the contrary, of which a striking example is to be found in that which declares that 'no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations to be made by law.' This not only imposes an important restriction on the power, but gives to Congress, as the law-making power, and to the House of Representatives as a portion of Congress, the right to withhold appropriations; and thereby, one important control over the treaty-making power, whenever money is required to carry a treaty into effect, which is usually the case, especially in reference to those of much importance.

reary-marking power, whenever money is required to carry a treaty much importance.

MORE IMPORTANT LIMITATION.

There still remains another and more important limitation, but of a more general and indefinite character. It can enter into no stipulation calculated to change the character of the Government, or to do that which can only be done by the Constitution-making power, or which is inconsistent with the nature and structure of the Government, or the objects for which it was formed. Among which it seems to be settled that it can not change or alter the boundary of a State or cede any portion of its territory without its consent. Within these limits all questions which may arise between us and other powers, be the subject-matter what it may, fall within the limits of the treaty-making power and may be adjusted by it. (Calbour's Works, I, 203.)

This definition was used in Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 United States, 483, and in People v. Gerke, 5 California, 381.

Perhaps the ablest and most accurate law writer of the past fifty years was Judge Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan. He always undertook to state the law as it had been settled by the decisions of the courts. Writing in 1880, he reached this conclusion:

"The President has power, by and with the consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators concur. The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power, but it is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a Department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authority." (Constitutional Law, 3d ed., p. 117.)

A more extended discussion of this subject is found in the late work of John Randolph Tucker on "The Constitution of the United States," published in 1899. After stating the question to be "Whether the exclusive power of treaty making, vested in the President and Senate, is unlimited in its operation upon all the objects for which a treaty may provide," he gives the respect POWER NOT ABSOLUTE.

"Congress has, under the Constitution, the right to lay taxes and imposts as well as to regulate foreign trade; but the President and the Senate, if the treaty-making power be regarded as absolute, would be able to evade this limitation by adopting treaties which would compel Congress to destroy its whole tariff system. According to the Constitution Congress has the right to determine questions of naturalization, of patents, and of copyright. But, according to the view here contested, the President and Senate, by a treaty could on these important questions utterly destroy the legislative capacity of the House of Representatives. The Constitution gives Congress the right of declaring war. This right would be illusory if the President and Senate could by a treaty launch the country into a foreign war. The power of borrowing money on the credit of the United States resides in Congress; this power would cease to exist if the President and Senate could by treaty bind the country to the borrowing of foreign funds. By the Constitution 'no money shall be drawn from the Freasury but in consequence of appropriations made by the law;' but this limitation would cease to exist if by a treaty the United States could be bound to pay money to a foreign power. * * * Congress would cease to be the law-making power as is prescribed by the Constitution. The law-making power would be the President and the Senate. Such a condition would become the more dangerous from the fact that treaties so adopted, being on this particular hypothesis superior to legislation, would continue in force until superseded by other treaties. Not only, therefore, would a Congress consisting of two houses be made to give way to an oligarchy of President and Senate, but the decrees of this oligarchy when once made could only be changed by concurrence of President and of senatorial majority of two-thirds."—(Ueber den Abschluss von Staats vertragen.)

As a conclusion to this résumé of the views of authors and publicists upon this subject the following review by Prof. von Holst, the well-known German-American historian, is both pertinent and instructive:

incists upon this subject the following review by Prot. von Holst, the well-known German-American historian, is both pertinent and instructive:

**CAN NOT BE UNLIMITED.**

"As to the extent of the treaty power the Constitution says nothing, but it evidently can not be unlimited. The power exists only under the Constitution, and every treaty stipulation inconsistent with a provision of the constitutional law is just facto null and void. Simple and self-evident as this principle is in theory, yet it may be very difficult under certain circumstances to decide whether or not it has been transgressed in fact. Indeed, the chief difficulty arises from the question of the relation of the treaty power of the President with the concurrence power of the Senate bears to the legislative power of Congress. The question is answered by saying that these powers must be coordinate, for treaties, like laws, are 'sovereign acts,' which differ from laws only in form and in the organs by which the sovereign will expresses itself. It follows from this principle that a law can be repealed by a treaty (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 253) as well as a treaty by a law (The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wallace, 616). If a treaty and a law are in opposition, their respective dates must decide whether the one or the other is to be regarded as repealed (Foster v. Neilson, 2 Peters, 253, 314; Doe v. Braden, 16 Howard, 635). * * Neither the principle nor the correctness of these conclusions from it can well be disputed, and they are, at any rate, valid constitutional law. But in spite of this, it must be admitted that the doctrine has its doubtful side both in theory and practice. It must be called at least an anomaly that, by the ex parte action of the President and two-thirds of the House of Representatives with the Senate and President, or a two-thirds majority of each House of Congress. The repeal of a treaty by the enactment of a law may, however, lead the more easily to serious consequences, because the incompatibility of the law and of the treaty

CONFINED BY DECISIONS OF COURTS.

CONFINED BY DECISIONS OF COURTS.

The text of a sound treatise on any subject of law is based upon and confined by the decisions of the courts upon that subject. I have followed this historical treatment of the treaty-making power from the Constitutional Convention of 1787 to the present time, purposely quoting any direct mention of the decisions in order that we might see what effect those decisions had from time to time upon the definitions and descriptions of the power as given by subsequent writers. The result is interesting and peculiar. In 1802 Tucker, the first author, cited no authority except the text of the Constitution; thirty years later Story cited Tucker, Rawle, and Jefferson, while in 1880 Cooley cites Tucker and Story, as herein quoted, in support of his text. The reason for this is plain, since the judicial decisions have been only so many applications of general rule to specific states of fact. For it is readily seen that while many of the decisions contain broad general statements to the effect that treaties are the supreme law of the land, there is always the accompanying qualification that it must be a constitutional treaty in order to be so considered.

It is clear that there may be an unconstitutional treaty, just as there may be an unconstitutional act of Congress. This point is well illustrated by the treaty negotiated in 1854 at Caracas by the United States minister and the Venezuelan Government, which provided, in its twenty-fifth article, that in case a citizen of either country should accept a commission in the service of an enemy at war with the other country he should be deemed a pirate and so punished. Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, promptly repudiated the treaty, which was satisfactory in other respects, upon the ground that the Constitution provided that Congress should define the crime of piracy and its punishment, and that it could not be made the subject of a treaty. If the treaty had been ratified, there can be no doubt that the courts would have sustained Mr. Marcy's view.

Cooley recognizes the right of the House of Representatives to annul such a treaty in the following express terms:

"An unconstitutional or manifestly unwise treaty, the House of Representatives may possibly refuse to aid; and this, when legislation is needful, would be equivalent to a refusal of the Government, through one of its branches, to carry the treaty into effect. This would be an extreme measure, but it is conceivable that a case might arise in which a resort to it would be justifiable." (Constitutional Law, 3d ed., 175.) Some of the opinions go further and expressly declare that treaties, like laws, are bound by the provisions of the Constitution. Thus, in 1847, in the License Cases (5 How., 613), Mr. Justice Daniel said:

"By the sixth article and second clause of the Constitution it is thus declared: 'That this Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof and treaties made under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land.'

"This provision of the Constitution, it is to be feared, is sometimes applied or expounded without those qualifications which the character of the parties to that instrument and its adaptation to the purpose for which it was created necessarily imply."

applied of expounded without those qualifications which the character of the parties to that Instrument and its adaptation to the purpose for which it was created necessarily imply."

IS COINCIDENT WITH RIGHTS OF STATES.

"Every power delegated to the Federal Government must be expounded in coincidence with a perfect right in the States to all they have not delegated; in coincidence, too, with the possession of every power and right necessary for their existence and preservation, for it is impossible to believe that these ever were, in intention or in fact, ceded to the General Government. Laws of the United States, in order to be binding, must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution. Treaties to be valid must be made within the scope of the same powers, for there can be no authority of the United States save what is derived mediately or immediately and regularly and legitimately from the Constitution. A treaty, no more than an ordinary statute, can arbitrarily cede away any one right of a State or of any citizen of a State."

It therefore makes little difference whether the power is restricted "in subordination to the Constitution and can not supersede or interfere with any of its fundamental provisions," as Judge Story puts it, or to "the principles of the Constitution from which alone the power proceeds," as Mr. Rawle says; or we agree with Judge Duer that "those principles of the Constitution from which the power proceeds should carefully be applied to it;" or with Justice Field that the power is limited "by those restraints which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments and those arising from the nature of the Government to the Hule that the power "is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States; for they, in substance, are all equivalent to Cooley's statement of the rule that the power must, under our form of gov

TREATY-MAKING POWER.

TREATY-MAKING POWER.

In the actual exercise of the treaty-making power it has been construed to extend to the acquisition of property belonging to the citizens of each in the territory of the other: (U. S. v. Forty-three Gallons of Whisky, 93 U. S., 197); provisions for inheritance by aliens (Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S., 489; Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S., 266; Bohand v. Bize, 105 Fed., 485; People v. Gerke, 5 Cal., 381); the establishment of consular tribunals (In re Ross, 140 U. S., 463); to enable aliens to purchase and hold lands (Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat., 259); to create a judicial system (Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal., 242); the acquisition of territory by the United States (Am. Ins. Co. v. Canter, 1 Pet., 511; Philippine cases, 182 U. S., 197; 183 U. S., 181); the settlement of boundaries between States (U. S. v. Texas, 162 U. S., 38; R. I. v. Mass., 12 Pet., 725); the granting and accepting of awards for injuries (Frevail v. Bache, 14 Pet., 97; Bachman v. Lawson, 109 U. S., 660); and the conferring of citizenship on Indians (Cross v. Harrison, 16 How., 164; U. S. v. Rhodes, Fed. Cas. 16, 151).

I have not attempted to cite all the decisions in point, but only some of the lending cases that support the statement. It will be noticed that all of these instances are properly within the fair exercise of the power, and neither interferes with a department of the Federal Government nor robs a State—to use Judge Cooley's phrase—of its constitutional authority.

It is hardly necessary to cite authority to show that the Federal Government nor robs a state—to use Judge Cooley's phrase—of its constitutional authority.

of the power, and neither interferes with a department of the Federal Government nor robs a State—to use Judge Cooley's phrase—of its constitutional authority.

It is hardly necessary to cite authority to show that the Federal Government is one of enumerated powers, and that the States retain control of their domestic and local affairs. But if it be thought necessary, the fellowing language of Mr. Justice Brewer, in the current number of the advance sheets of the United States Supreme Court Reports, may suffice. In referring to the effect of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, Judge Brewer said:

"Notwithstanding the adoption of these three amendments the National Government still remains one of enumerated powers, and the tenth amendment, which reads 'the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people,' is not shorn of its vitality." (Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S.)

To what extent, then, may a State control its public schools in the admission or exclusion or separation of different races of pupils?

In People v. Gerke (5 Cal., 381), and that class of cases which permit aliens to finerit contrary to the provisions of State laws, it was contended that the treaty, in effect, nullified the State laws, it was contended that the treaty, in effect, nullified the State laws upon that subject. But in the Gerke case this objection was answered as follows:

"One of the arguments at the bar against the extent of this power of treaty is that it permits the Federal Government to control the internal policy of the States, and, in the present case, to alter materially the statutes of distribution. * * I think, however, that no such consequence follows as is insisted. The statutes of distribution are not altered or affected. Allenage is the subject of the treaty. Its disability results from political reasons which arose at an early period of the history of civilization, and which the enlightened adv

Treaties of this kind do not confer any thing or right upon the for-algner; they merely permit foreigners to take that which is their own.

But the granting to unnaturalized foreigners the right to attend the public schools of a State, either with or without charge, is something more. Does it, in Judge Cooley's language, "rob the State of its constitutional authority," and is it in the language of Justice Field, within those restrictions "arising from the nature of the Government itself and of that of the States?" Are the local public schools of a city, maintained exclusively by local taxation and presumably for the exclusive use of citizens, "properly the subject of negotiation with a foreign country?" (Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S., 258.) The answers to these questions all turn upon the nature of our Government and the relation of the State governments to the United States Government under the Constitution.

It may be considered as fairly well settled that the establishment of separate schools for white and for colored children does not violate the constitutional right of either class to the equal privileges and immunities guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, provided equal advantages are provided for each class. (People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y., 488; 45 Am. Rep., 232; Cory v. Carter, 48 Ind. 327; 17 Am. Rep., 738; McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C., 609; 10 L. R. A., 823; State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St., 198; Martin v. Board of Education, 42 W. v., 514; Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo., 546; 11 L. R. A., 828; State v. Maryland Institute, etc., 87 Md., 643; Roberts v. City of Boston, 5 Cush., 198.)

Equality, and not identity, of privileges and rights is what is guaranteed to the citizen. If the right claimed be not guaranteed by the Federal Government can constitutionally control it either by treaty or otherwise.

Likewise it has been repeatedly decided that State laws requiring separate coaches for white and for colored passengers.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster].

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, in the course of my remarks last week upon the treaty power of the Government, in response to a question from the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Gaines], I stated that aside from the disability affecting the right of suffrage the Government had undertaken to deal with nearly all the disabilities of alienage by treaty stipulations. I did not make myself quite clear in that statement. I was not quite accurate. What I meant to say was that aside from those disabilities of alienage which affect political rights the Government had dealt with nearly all, if not quite all, of the disabilities of alienage. That is to say, Mr. Chairman, there are two classes of disabilities of alienage. The first class relates to civil rights, and the second class relates to political rights. Our Government has dealt with and has undertaken to remove by treaty stipulation the disabilities of allenage affecting civil rights; but it has never, so far as my knowledge goes, undertaken to deal with or to relieve foreigners of the disabilities of alienage affecting political rights. litical rights I mean those which enable one to participate in the management of the Government. I wish to make myself clear upon this subject. I claim that the National Government through its treaty powers has the right to remove the first class of disabilities. I deny that it has the power to remove the disabilities of alienage of the second class. In this respect we can not differ from that constitutional government which confessedly exercises its treaty-making power as the result of sover-eignty, for no one would claim, I believe, that such a govern-ment through its treaty-making power could admit foreigners to participate in the management of its government.

Mr. GARRETT. Why? Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Because, among other reasons and I have not the time now to go deeply into the subject—that subject is not a proper one for international agreement. The other disabilities of alienage, as has been shown, I think, by myself—certainly has been shown by my distinguished friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley]—are proper subjects for international negotiation.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman's reasons, then, are not found in the structure of the Government?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes. I could go further and point out that the limitation of the treaty power which Mr. Calhoun mentioned, and which I quoted—that is, the form of our Government-would prohibt the treaty-making power of the Government from attempting to say by treaty stipulation that foreigners might participate in the management of the Government, either State or nation. This is a government by the people, a government by people who owe allegiance to the National Government, and therefore to the State governments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. COUSINS. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask the gentleman whether he does not think it to be the duty of one of the Members of Congress to introduce a bill, and the Foreign Affairs Committee to report it, declaring that this Government will not stand by any treaty, or will revoke any treaty, that permits the States to be required to educate any children of any citizen of any other government, and declaring that no person shall have any right that is not guaranteed to the citizens of the State in which the foreigner may reside?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I would hardly undertake to say what bills Members should introduce; but I will say that the Foreign Affairs Committee as now constituted will carefully consider all bills which are introduced by any Member of the House and referred to that committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will try to furnish the gentleman with a bill.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Ver-Mr. McNARY. mont, in view of the fact that nine States of the Union now allow foreigners to vote and participate in the political management of their affairs without being naturalized, merely having made the formal declaration, whether or not, if these States have the power to do that now, they would not have power to do it under an agreement with a foreign nation?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I should very much doubt it. They might with the consent of Congress.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me. You say that a State can, with the consent of Congress, make such an agreement with a foreign government.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I said they might, if you are correct in your position.

Mr. SHERLEY. Assuming that the State could do it, would not the fact that the State could do it preclude the idea that the treaty-making power could do it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Oh, not at all.
Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer this question? If an agreement to do a certain thing might be stated and made to have all the binding force of a treaty, then in that particular instance a treaty and an agreement would be the same, would it not? It does not matter whether you call that an agreement or a treaty, if they both accomplish the same purpose they are exactly the same thing. Well, if that be true, how does the gentleman get around the proposition that a State can not make a treaty?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I have not said at any time during my remarks that it can not make an agreement with the consent of Congres

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Constitution so states. The Constitution says that no State shall enter into any treaty, and it could not be put any clearer than when it says that no State, without the consent of Congress, shall enter into an agreement. The point I make is this: That this necessarily shows that a treaty and an agreement were different things, embracing different subjects.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I so understand it. Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider it a fair construction of one provision of the Constitution that will deny the validity of another provision of the Constitution?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I shall not undertake to say what the fathers had in mind when they provided that a State should enter into no such agreement without the consent of Congress. There are text-book writers and distinguished members of the legal profession who claim that every international agreement is a treaty. Whatever they may have intended by that provision, it is plain that the fathers placed the treaty-making power in the National Government.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print, as a part of my remarks, the address referred to in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio such time as he may desire.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to trespass upon the good nature of the House by submitting some remarks this afternoon upon a subject somewhat new to the Congress of the United States, the subject of the tariff in its various forms and developments; but I am not in a physical condition to do myself justice, and therefore, with very many feelings of obligation to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Cousins], chairman of the committee, who has yielded this time, I will yield back my time to him, and to-morrow, if opportunity offers, I will proceed with my remarks.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I will now ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Howard] to use such time as he may desire. Mr. HOWARD. We are not in a position on this side to use any further time now, and unless the gentleman from Iowa can go on on his own side we will have to yield back the time. Mr. COUSINS. There is no further request for time on this side. I therefore ask that we take up the bill for consideration under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For the payment of the cost of tuition of student interpreters at the legation to Japan, at the rate of $125 per annum each, $750.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I should like to ask, Mr. Chairman, in what manner these student interpreters are chosen, as a matter of fact.

Mr. COUSINS. They are chosen by the President of the United States.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is there any sort of examina-

Mr. COUSINS. All consular appointees, and all other appointees to the foreign service now, except ambassadors, are required to be examined, and have been for some time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And are these students ex-

Mr. COUSINS. They are.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. How are they called to the attention of the President?

Mr. COUSINS. They are appointed directly by him, and then appear at the State Department, where they are examined as to their fitness

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Their appointment is entirely in the discretion of the President.

Mr. COUSINS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not provided by a recent order that these consular positions, and positions of that sort, shall be distributed to a certain extent according to the population of the different States?

Mr. COUSINS. In the new regulations I understand there is some such provision.

Mr. SOUTHARD. By whom are these examinations conducted?

Mr. COUSINS. There is a committee, and I think one of the Civil Service Commissioners is included in that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GROUND RENT OF LEGATION AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

Annual ground rent of the legation at Tokyo, Japan, for the year ending March 15, 1908, $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary. Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "necessary," in line 8, page 9, amend by adding: "For the purchase of ground and the erection of an embassy building in the City of Mexico, $60,000."

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, of course I must reserve a point of order against that. But I should like to hear what the gentleman has to say on the subject.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I thank the gentleman from Iowa for his courtesy. The City of Mexico is the one capital of a foreign and friendly country with which I have great personal familiarity. In the prosecution of business enterprises I have occasion to visit the Republic of Mexico frequently, and almost annually I am in the City of Mexico and spend some time there. It has been a source of some mortification to me when I have found that other governments less important—in my view, of course, which may be a partial one—than the United States have splendid residences in which to house their legations, while whenever there is a change of ambassador from the United States the new ambassador must go house hunting. And, Mr. Chairman, it is not an easy thing in the City of Mexico to find a comfortable or suitable residence for the American ambassador.

Now, some time or other we will undoubtedly rise to the right plane and do our duty in this matter. Some time or other we will unquestionably provide for the purchase of ground and the erection of buildings in which to house our ambassadors abroad, and this, I think, sir, is as good a time as any to begin. The City of Mexico, for many reasons it seems to me, is the most desirable capital in which to make that beginning.

Last fall sensational newspaper correspondents and timid travelers came flocking out of Mexico with the cry of an impending revolution. They stated that this revolution was more aimed at American citizens than at the Government of Mexico. I happened to be in the country at the time, spent some weeks there, and was there when the outbreak was expected. I never saw a more peaceable country; I never saw a more orderly people; and in all my visits to Mexico I never received more consideration nor was I ever more courteously treated than on that occasion.

Recently, and indeed at the present time, in my own home a trial is being had of some revolutionists who were charged with conspiring against a friendly government, the Republic of Mexico. Now, our laws, which make this Government a haven for political agitators, are not thoroughly understood by the Latin people who direct the destinies of Mexico. They can't see why a friendly country should harbor their avowed enemies. I think it is due them that we should make some recognition of their importance as a friendly people, and we can not do it better than by giving to our embassy the advantage of a house of its own. There ought to be in the great City of Mexico a piece of territory belonging to the United States. The compensation of the ambassador is not very great, as he is compelled out of his limited official income to hire a house for himself. That ought not to be the case.

Mr. Chairman, the commerce between this country and Mexico is large and is growing marvelously. Our commercial and social relations with that country are upon a closer and closer basis from year to year. Our railways cross the river on the border of Texas and through Arizona into Mexico without interruption and without vexatious delays at the custom-houses. Mexico realizes the importance of our commerce and the desirability of maintaining closer relations with us. This will be a grateful compliment and concession to that Government and put our embassy on a proper plane. I sincerely hope the gentleman from Iowa will not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I am in duty bound to make the point of order. I will say further to the gentleman from Texas that on the request of your Committee on Foreign Affairs at the last session the State Department, only a day or two ago, furnished a report on the probable expense of building buildings for some of our legations, but that report is not yet printed. When we come to consider that subject we shall consider it on its merits altogether. I think the gentleman will agree with me that that will be the better way to do it. I am quite agreeable to the idea of our country owning its premises at the various embassies and legations, but I think we should take it up at some time and consider it aside from the general appropriation bill.

Mr. SIAYDEN. Does not the gentleman think it will be more difficult to get a general plan adopted than it would be to provide one location in one capital where it is urgently needed, for comfortable and suitable houses are scarce there?

Mr. COUSINS. It might or might not be more difficult, but it would certainly be more intelligent to consider it on its merits. The idea of slipping in one here and there from time to time would not result. I think, in the end favorably.

time would not result, I think, in the end favorably.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the amendment calls for a very modest expenditure. It will not build a palace, and it is needed, and I wish the gentleman would give the House an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. COUSINS. I have no doubt that in the near future, in the next session, we shall consider that subject, and it is the intention of your committee to take it up and present it to the House for consideration.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want these buildings built before the 4th of March, 1909.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For salary of consul-general at Boma, Kongo Free State, class 5, $4,500.
For salary of consul at Calgary, Canada, class 9, $2,000.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this is a new consul-general's office?

Mr. COUSINS. To which one does the gentleman refer?

Mr. MANN. Well, you provide in the bill a paragraph under the act of reorganization of last year, and then provide for a salary of a consul-general at Boma, and also for the salary of a consul at Calgary, Canada. If these were provided for in the reorganization act, why are they segregated here?

Mr. COUSINS. They were not provided for in the reorganization act, but were in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. But they are not provided in the reorganization act. There is no law for their provision.

Mr. COUSINS. The law is in the appropriation act.

Mr. MANN. The law of an appropriation act is not sufficient law for next year.

Mr. COUSINS. Oh, I think so, as a basis for another appropriation,

Mr. MANN. Well, let the Chairman rule on that, if necessary. What is the reason for this? It is true that last year, immediately following the reorganization act, where everything was included as consulates and consuls-general that anybody could think of at the time, the bill went over to the Senate and some additions were made, almost before the ink was dry on the President's signature. What is the occasion for that?

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that it very

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that it very often happens it becomes necessary to place men at new points. For instance, we abandoned eight last year. We expect to abandon many others. I am told by the Department that certain consulates can be from time to time abandoned. It became necessary, in the opinion of the President, to send a man to Boma to make certain investigations now going on, and that was the reason it was provided for at the last session.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says they abandoned eight at the last session. There were not eight abandoned except in the reorganization of the consular department.

Mr. COUSINS. Well, that was at the last session.

Mr. MANN. I understand—a law was passed providing for the omission of certain consulates and the addition of certain consulates. That law was a very late expression of opinion on the part of the Department of State as to the necessities, and gentlemen say that the President advised this. As a matter of fact, the item was added in the Senate, and I have often seen items added in appropriation bills in various legislative bodies that were not asked for by the Executive and not asked for by anyone, except somebody in interest.

for by anyone, except somebody in interest.

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that there was a very great influx of Americans to this point in Canada, and it was deemed necessary that we should have a representative there. I was very much surprised that more were not proposed, that only two were added to the entire list provided for in the so-called "consular reform bill;" and it seems to me that these two that were added were absolutely needed. As I said before, from time to time it is thought by the Department that other consulates can be discontinued. Our service must necessarily be to a greater or less extent flexible, and wherever the interests of our own citizens require it and the interests of the country we should have at least enough flexibility to establish a consulate if necessary or a consular agency.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman says is entirely true; but, on the other hand, here is a bill reorganizing the service that is approved on April 5, and immediately thereafter recommendation is made to add two new consulates that nobody had thought of up to that time. That is very rapid work.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion, which I think will appeal to him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Let us take the consul-general in the Kongo Free State. The gentleman is certainly familiar with the very considerable degree of agitation there has been in this country in reference to the condition of the Kongo. This body has been flooded with petitions asking for action in reference to situations existing in the Kongo. Questions of considerable diplomatic delicacy have arisen, and it was to furnish further information, to furnish further facilities for dealing with the question, which was a new question and which had risen in its importance since the consular bill was passed, that this new station was established. That illustrates the way in which, in the constant changes of trade and of diplomatic relations between different governments, new situations arise which require the action of new officials. I am sure that, in view of all the farreaching questions that are raised with reference to it, the gentleman will thoroughly agree in the wisdom of the Government's action in sending to the Kongo a special representative of the United States. I am not familiar with the one in Canada, but doubtless, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Cousins], exigencies have arisen there or necessities of trade have suggested it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall that there was any special difference in the situation as concerning the Kongo Free State between the 5th of April and the adjournment of the last session of Congress?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to have the gentleman's recollection refresh mine. I had, and I have no doubt the gentleman had, stacks of petitions and letters upon the subject long before the consular reorganization bill was brought into the House at all. I do not recall any special consideration of the subject between the time of the passage of that bill and the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. We all of us had stacks of correspondence and many missives prior to the passage of that bill, and those have continued to follow in not lessening volume. Perhaps it might have been well a year ago to have decided upon the appointment of this officer, which has since been made, but the State Department at that time had not reached the point of thinking it was judicious to have this special examination made. Since then, in view of the continued agitation, in view of the continued interest in questions in reference to the internal condition of the Kongo, it has decided upon this appointment, and surely the gentleman does not think that if a step is thought to be wise now the fact that it had not been decided upon a year ago should for all time bar the Government from adopting a measure the wisdom of which I am quite sure will appeal to the gentleman himself.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Has he ever made any investigation of the subject, and is he prepared to say, upon his investigation, it is a wise step to take?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. MANN. From personal investigations or simply because it is in the bill, which?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; not because it is in the bill, but because I have read with great care volumes of evidence bearing upon this question, and I have also read documents and petitions innumerable from citizens of the United States, to whose requests we are certainly bound to yield proper deference.

Mr. MANN. Let us see what the situation is. Here is a bill—I do not remember now whether the consular reorganization bill as it came to the House was a Senate or House bill.

Mr. PERKINS. It was a Senate bill. Mr. MANN. It passed the Senate; it was a Senate bill, and it came to the House and was largely amended. Reasons were given for the action in the Senate in the first instance and for the action in the House making the amendments. The amendments were numerous. It went back to the Senate, went into conference, and changes were made in conference. Reasons were given. The bill became a law. No reason has ever been given to either House of Congress for inserting either one of these items in the bill. The gentleman assumes that there be reason for it. No reason has ever been communicated by the Executive to either House of Congress showing any necessity for putting these items in the bill. Now, I am assuming that if the Executive asked for it there may be reason for it, but the gentleman knows as well as I, and we all know, that often places are created not because there is a necessity for the position from the public-service standpoint, but because there is a necessity for the position to put somebody in.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, that is not at all applicable to this The gentleman is wrong in his statement. There have been abundant reasons for the appointment of this consul-general to the Kongo Free State given to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which reported the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the committee had any hearings we will be glad to have them.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, I am endeavoring in a weak and ineffectual way to transmit the information which the committee has received to the House when this item comes on for consideration, and it seems to me that in every way it is properly brought before the House. It was the opinion of the State Department, it is the committee's opinion now, I think it will be the opinion of the entire community, and I hope it will be the opinion of this House that, in view of the conditions existing in the Kongo Free State, it is proper for this Government to appoint a consul-general there whose duty shall be to look into and consider these questions, and also to have under his charge the largely increasing American interests in the Kongo Free The gentleman, a careful student of every political ques-

Do not get sarcastic.

Mr. PERKINS. Knows that important contracts have been made between the Belgian Government and American citizens in reference to very important branches of trade in the Kongo Free State, contracts of great size and importance, and I am sure the gentleman will see the eminent propriety of the appointment of this officer. There may have been offices created not for public need but for private advantage, but surely there has been no addition made to the force of consuls for a long time which it seems to me was more justified alike by political and by business considerations than this particular appointment to which the gentleman calls attention.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York has my entire confidence at all times. I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs as to the needs of consular places, but I do not believe myself that the Committee on Foreign Affairs has expressed or has any judgment in reference to this office or this place.

It is put in the bill this year simply because it was in the bill last year. It was inserted in the bill last year because the committee in charge of it had to yield in conference, not because they inserted it, not because they asked for it, not because they thought it was right. It was yielding to another body. Now, if the gentleman can give us any statement that his committee has considered the matter, I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman's remarks, although he has always been most courteous, are to me very painful, because when I had endeavored as best I could to state reasons for the appointment of this consul-general in the Kongo Free State which seemed to me to be very satisfactory the gentleman says we had no reasons and we give no reasons.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the ability to give reasons on any subject, and at any time that he has to do so. But that is not the question. The question with me is whether the committee had any reason and gave any consideration to this question. Of course the gentleman can give reasons based upon some petitions they had.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee had reasons, which I have endeavored to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and those reasons by the committee were deemed sufficient, as I hope they will be by the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order upon that item.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. Cousins] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins] a question for information. Having served a long time on that committee, I take a great deal of interest in its affairs. Has anybody observed any improvement in the consular system of the United States since that consular bill was passed here remodeling it?

Mr. COUSINS. The time of its operation being so very limited perhaps very little can be observed so soon. However, I will say to the gentleman that the Chief of the Consular Bureau has stated that largely by reason of the elimination of fees and turning them over to the Government instead of letting them be retained by the consuls has resulted in a situation which places it about $19,000 ahead so far.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question. As to these numerous papers that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Per-KINS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] were talk-ing about receiving, it was constantly stated by boards of trade and other self-constituted advisers that the consular service in the United States was loaded up with a lot of weaklings and Now, have any of those undesirable consuls been incapables. weeded out of the system since this law was passed?

Mr. COUSINS. I do not concede the truth of those statements that were made from time to time by the gentleman and by the papers referred to. I have saved some of those utterances, and the difference of opinion that existed at that time concerning our consular service is remarkable. There was one gentleman who used to appear before the committee, when the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark], now upon the floor, was a member of the committee, and whose name I do not care to mention in connection with his words which I shall quote, who spoke in a city not far from Washington along about that time in this fashion:

As now conducted, although it possesses some virtues and includes a few good men, our service, as a whole, is a blot on the political and commercial records of this country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The chances are that that man has learned a good deal better since then.

Mr. COUSINS. It is to be hoped he has. However, there was another class of men that appeared in the city of Washington when they had their meeting a year or more ago, and I will read the utterances of one of those gentlemen, which I think is far more of a credit to the association he represented and to our country and to the truth than the miserable utterance I read a moment ago. This gentleman, who is from the city of Brooklyn, said:

From personal observation and acquaintance with many consuls abroad, I believe that in intelligence and faithful performance of duty our consuls compare well with those of other nations. However, we should strive to improve this standard and endeavor to obtain adequate compensation for our consuls, which compensation seems to be at present meager.

This convention, representing the leading commercial interests of this country, is called for the purpose of carefully considering the sub-ject and urging Congress to adopt measures which will prove beneficial to the consular service.

That is the character of utterance that is worthy of the organization and of the gentleman who made it. It is worthy of this country, and it comes more nearly representing the truth at that time and at the present time than the wild utterances of other gentlemen contemporaneous with these that I have quoted.

I could go on further and give the opinion of foreigners concerning our consular service, and I think that since the subject has been raised I will read briefly from Doctor Vosberg-Rekow, a well-known economist. He has this to say of American consuls:

The Americans have acted judiciously in establishing a system which is of the greatest advantage to themselves, but costly and inconvenient to their competitors. In all countries with which it has trade relations the United States has stationed consuls and consular agents. Every shipment of goods to a United States port must pass through the hands of these officials, and the amount, value, place of origin, market price ruling in the country of production, method of production, etc., are noted. The consuls thus dive deeply into the economic condition of their districts and obtain information the result of which is discernible in the steadily increasing exportations of their home country.

I read further from the Frankfürter Zeitung commenting on our system and on our foreign service:

our system and on our foreign service:

The American does not wait until a report is "due," but makes it when an occasion occurs. These opportune reports, which are being adopted in England more and more, may be inferior to ours in scientific thoroughness and accuracy, but their practical value is twice as great. The Commercial Museum of Vienna gives some examples of the promptness of these reports. On the 10th of June a German vessel was plundered by pirates at Maracaibo. On the 20th of June the American consul sends a report about the equipment of a ship necessary to evade the pirates. The consul in Venezuela notices that there is an excellent opening for American coal at La Guaira and writes his report, exactly a page long, but containing all necessary information. Those interested receive prompt and exact information. Can not our officials do the same? Certainly they can do it, if they are informed as to the real needs of home industries, but it requires, of course, special training.

I quote further from the London Dally Mail of September 27:

I quote further from the London Daily Mail of September 27: One can not fail to notice the admirable business promptitude of American consuls, who are so alert that within a few weeks of the opening of a new establishment they pay a visit, and immediately report to their countrymen new openings that are arising in countries where they are located. How many of our consuls would take such steps as these? Possibly the solution is to be found in commercial attachés to the consulates. Certainly something should be done to keep home manufacturers as much abreast of foreigners and as well informed on foreign openings as our American cousins are kept by their alert consuls.

I guide further from Mr. Bohert P. Vates, chairman of the

I quote further from Mr. Robert P. Yates, chairman of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, After expressing his ap-preciation of American consuls, etc., Mr. Yates was asked by the reporter:

the reporter:

"So you think the American consuls make themselves more useful to their country than the British do to theirs?"

"Yes; there can be no doubt of it. The United States consul, to begin with, has fewer traditions. That is a great advantage. He has also, in my experience, a far keener eye to industrial and commercial affairs and a better capacity for details, technical and otherwise. In, I believe, sixty towns and cittes of the British Isles there is an American consulate. About half of these are in charge of American citizens, the others being English; but these latter are mostly at the unimportant places. The thirty Americans have taken to the duties of ambassadors of commerce with a zeal which can not, I think, be too closely followed by British consuls in foreign countries. Of course it is only of late years that manufacturers of the United States have generally laid themselves out for a foreign trade. But, like new beginners at most things, they have put a lot of enthusiasm into the work and have spared no trouble. This enthusiasm is shared by the consuls, and they take a pleasure in acquiring information likely to be useful, even though it may entail a good deal of trouble and expenditure of a lot of time. Yet the American consuls are not given to the writing of long-winded reports or to explaining at length the principles upon which American merchants should conduct their export business."

"But," I inquired, "in what way do the United States consuls get better information than the British?"

"I should say they take a great deal more trouble over getting information and go to work in a different fashion. The American consul, as a rule, is the sort of man to cultivate the acquaintance of business men in his district, and of course we know that the citizens of the Stars and Stripes are champions at the gentle art of questioning, and their questions are usually, very much to the point. If a man in a large way of business is willing to 'open out' at all, the American consul will stick to him until

I might go on and read numerous expressions of foreigners concerning the American consular service and American officers that represent us. I am very glad that this question has been raised. I believe that by reason of the consular reform bill of last session and by what we are doing from time to time by way of appropriations our service will be very greatly improved.

It had been characterized by one whose opinion is very good, in my judgment—the Secretary of State—as "uneven." I think that came nearer describing our foreign service than any other term I have heard.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One more question. Was not that consular bill, or bill reforming the consular service, gotten through both Houses of Congress by reason of just exactly such articles as you have been reading, condemning the consular service as then existing?

Mr. COUSINS. I think that the agitation at the time, perhaps, aided in hastening the legislation which the committee had formerly recommended.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the consent of the House to proceed for ten minutes. It is entirely possible that I would not use all that time, but I would like to have the privilege of proceeding ten minutes.

Mr. COUSINS. I hope that the gentleman will be given that privilege. The gentleman had asked for time in general debate, but was not given it, and I hope that he will have that privilege extended to him now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, any man who occupies the position of President of the United States is an object of interest to the people at large. The present occupant of that high office would be a striking figure even if he did not have the aid of the pomp and circumstance of the Presidency. commonplace; he is always interesting and usually picturesque.

Mr. MANN. And right. Mr. SLAYDEN. Picturesque. Indeed, there have been times in which I would like him to have been less picturesque than he was. He is a leader among men, takes his rightful station as a leader of men, and seems to be equally at home in a prayer meeting or a political powwow. Recently he made an extremely interesting speech here in the city of Washington to the national convention for the promotion of foreign commerce. Among other interesting things which he said upon that occasion was that he had by rules promulgated by the Department of State put the consular and diplomatic service upon a nonpartisan basis. He even went further and made the more surprising statement that it had been put upon a nonsectional basis.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that statement is interesting if true; but the President of the United States, like all men who talk a great deal and vehemently, is occasionally apt to get his facts all wrong. I do not believe that he means to be inaccurate; but any man who talks volumes can not always be accurate, and he certainly has been inaccurate in some instances.

Impressed by the importance of his statement that the consular and diplomatic service had been put upon a nonsectional and nonpartisan basis, I went to the Department of State to make an inquiry as to the facts, and this is a memorandum, Mr. Chairman, of the facts which I discovered in my visit to the Department of State. I submit this list, which is an enumeration of the diplomatic and consular service. In this list there is a record of 743 diplomatic and consular employees. It also shows that they were appointed from the various States and Territories as follows: Alabama, 2; Arkansas, 0; Florida, 3; Georgia, 2; Louisiana, 10; Mississippi, 1; Tennessee, 9; Texas, 10; Virginia, 4.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, leaving these orphan children of the South and crossing the river, we find the following to be the facts as to appointments. But first I will have to run over to the Pacific coast, because it comes alphabetically at the head of the list. California has 21, Connecticut 19, Indiana 19, Illinois 40, Iowa 23, New Jersey 25, Ohio 28, Pennsylvania 61, Massachusetts 53, New York 134.

Mr. PAYNE. Is that based on the population of the States or the voting population of the States, or is it on merit?
Mr. SLAYDEN. That, I think, Mr. Chairman, is based purely upon political prejudice. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. It would seem to me to be apportioned on merit.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will take the pains to investigate the census returns, he will either admit that he spoke in jest or was ill informed when he advanced the idea that it was probably done on the merit basis according to population.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have only ten minutes, and want to know before I yield to my friend from Illinois whether can get an extension or not.

Mr. MANN. We will get the gentleman an extension.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Go on.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman feel happier if we should say that in the South they send their best men to Congress, while in the North we send our best abroad?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it would probably be less embarrassing to those of us who have been sent to Congress if we could send some of our talent abroad. There would be less competition. I shall not take the time to read all of these figures, because I could not get these remarks into my ten minutes, but I will ask the privilege of printing them in the RECORD.

I ask my friend the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. PAYNE] to listen to these figures. Of these 733 employees, 134, or about one-fifth, were appointed from the State of New York, which has approximately onetwelfth of the population of the United States. Six States— New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, California, and Massachusetts-have 377 appointees in the consular and diplomatic service, or twenty-one more than half of the total, while Pennsylvania and New York combined have 195 of their citizens in this foreign service, twelve more than one-quarter of the entire number. And it is a comparatively easy matter to turn to the census tables and see what proportion of the population of the country these two great States have. The Southern States, with nearly one-third of the total population of the United States, are credited with only forty-nine appointees out of the 733 in the service, or about one-fifteenth of the whole. forty-nine, eleven were born in Northern States and nine are from foreign countries. Mr. Chairman, even when they come to dole out the very slender slices of pie that they give to the South in the consular and diplomatic service they give them to carpetbaggers rather than to the home-grown talent.

The relative importance of these appointments is shown in the fact that from the South we find one ambassador at a salary of $17,500 per year; two ministers at salaries of $7,500 per year; one consul at $5,000, one at $4,500, four at $4,000, and then there are others running on down until finally there are ten consular agents out of the forty-nine.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question? How many appointments does the gentleman know to have been made to the consular service since the 27th of June last, and how were they divided?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am reading from a bulletin issued by the State Department since that time.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But that covers the entire consular service, no matter how far back they were appointed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is my information. Among the other appointees from the South were ten consular agents who live upon fees ranging from $2,684.50 a year down to $310. There were ten consular agents, vice and deputy consuls, who received no salaries and collected no fees during the year which it was intended to cover by that report.

But even in the appointments made in the Southern States themselves there is a certain degree of discrimination manifested. Tennessee, which State elects two Republican Congressmen always, and has occasionally sent three, has one ambassador at $17,500 per year, one consul at $4,500, one at $3,500, one at $2,500, two at $2,000 per year, and two consular clerks at $1,200 per year. This is quite the lion's share of southern at $1,200 per year. This is data appointments. North Carolina, another State which has a Republican Representative upon this floor, is treated fairly well, having one minister with a salary of $7,500, one consul at a salary of $5,000, one whose salary is $3,000, two consular agents who collected fees last year amounting to $2,064. Texas, with a population greater than Massachusetts, with her fifty-three appointments in this service, or California, with its forty-one appointees in the consular and diplomatic service, is rewarded, possibly because of her persistent and large Democratic majorities, with ten appointments, the importance of which is shown by the following table

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the extension of the gentleman's time five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if he knows how many appointments Missouri has?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will put that in the RECORD in the morn-These appointments from Texas are of some interest to me, and therefore I wish to call the attention of the House to the appointments from that State. There are two consuls, one at $4,000 and one at $4,250. There are three consular agents, whose fees are as follows: The largest one was $689 for the last $309 for the man who had the second best place, and $123 for the man who had the least profitable office. There were three vice and deputy consuls who received no salaries and collected no fees. Fifty per cent of the appointees of Texas may have enjoyed the honor of an appointment, but certainly had no emoluments to enjoy.

Arkansas, one of the great States in this Union, important for the high character of her people and the great value of her contribution to the commerce of the country, has no appointment in either the diplomatic or consular service.

Mr. BOUTELL. In justice to the State of Arkansas it ought to be stated to the country that she has been singled out to receive for one of her distinguished citizens, U. M. Rose, of Little Rock, one of the greatest gifts in the diplomatic service, the appointment as a representative at the great Hague peace conference that is soon to meet.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand that, and I have no doubt the bar and the people of the South are grateful for the honor that was bestowed upon the State of Arkansas.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add in this connection that Arkansas has had for a great many years—up to a short time ago—the ambassador to Mexico.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; she has. Mr. Chairman, Nevada, like Arkansas, is shut out entirely; she has no representative in either the consular or diplomatic service. I presume that as the service has been put on a nonsectional and a nonpartisan basis it is a mere oversight of the State Department, just as the vast preponderance of appointments in the persistently and overwhelmingly Republican States is a mere accident.

Mr. Chairman, I do not complain of this state of affairs; I am simply reciting them as being of interest. I would, if I had the power enjoyed by the President, do just what he has done. It is a Republican Administration, and very properly the appointees are Republicans. If I had the power I would turn them all out, bag and baggage, and in six months the Federal pay rolls in the consular and diplomatic service, as well as other branches of the Government, would be a sweet and faint memory to all the Republicans in the country. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.1

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that the whole matter is easily explainable. When Mr. McKinley was first elected President he adopted the policy of examination for every candidate for a consular appointment, and unless that candidate could pass an examination he was not appointed. Now, since the beginning of McKinley's Administration down to the present time it has been the policy of the President and of the State Department to make these appointments depend more and more upon the qualifications of the various candidates; and when this principle is understood I presume even my friend from Texas will understand why there is such a great pre-ponderance of appointments from New York and so few from his own State. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from New York that if he opens the door of hope based on an intellectual, competitive, and academic examination it will forever bar Republicans from the South anywhere. [Laughter.]

The following are the diplomatic and consular appointments by States and Territories:

Alabama, 2; Arkansas, 0; California, 41; Colorado, 2; Connecticut, 19; Delaware, 1; Florida, 3; Georgia, 2; Idaho, 1; Illinois, 40; Indiana, 19; Iowa, 23; Kansas, 9; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 10; Maine, 21; Maryland, 19; Massachusetts, 53; Michigan, 15; Minnesota, 18; Mississippi, 1; Missouri, 12; Montana, 2; Nebraska, 7; Nevada, 0; New Hampshire, 6; New Jersey, 25; New York, 134; North Carolina, 5; North Dakota, 2; Ohio, 48; Oregon, 5; Pennsylvania, 61; Rhode Island, 11; South Carolina, 3; South Dakota, 5; Tennessee, 9; Texas, 10; Utah, 2; Vermont, 13; Virginia, 4; Washington, 9; West Virginia, 9; Wisconsin, 16; Wyoming, 0; Arizona, 2; Hawaii, 2; New Mexico, 0; Oklahoma, 1; District of Columbia, 21.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that, as far as New York is concerned, during the last two years there have been only two appointments to the consular service from that State. One of them was appointed at the request of the pottery in-terests from the interior of the country, and the only backing that man had of a political character was that of a Senator from West Virginia. The other one was a colored man, appointed to a very inconsiderable post in South America to succeed another colored man.

Within the last two weeks the question came up in the State Department as between a man from New York State and a man from Louisiana, both equally qualified, and because of the fact that New York is more abundantly represented in the service than Louisiana the appointment was given to the Louisiana man.

I think it only fair to the Secretary of State to say that this policy of promotions within the service, so far as it is a regular and determined thing, has been in existence only since the 27th of June last, and that there has been no further opportunity of carrying out the present purpose of the President and of the Secretary of State of putting the whole matter on a nonpartisan and nonsectional basis; that that one instance that I cite, where the decision was against the State of the President and of the Secretary of State and in favor of Louisiana, looks to me as though the President and Secretary of State were carrying out their express purpose of putting this service on just the basis that the President in that speech which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] has quoted said the service would

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I also wish to say for the information of the gentleman from Texas that four of the ministers whose salaries have been this day raised by your committee come from the Southern States-a very fair apportionment, I should think.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I should like to supplement what has been said about the various States with a reference to the statement often heard that Ohio monopolizes most of the Federal patronage. Ohio to-day has not a single representative in the diplomatic service of the United States, unless it be a secretary of one of the legations, perhaps an assistant, whose name I do not know and whose whereabouts I can not That is the situation in that great office-seeking State. We did have a representative at one of the European courts, but he was retired some time ago from the public service, and we are left absolutely without any representative whatever. We are satisfied with the situation, however, from the fact that we do not rise in rebellion for the "last of the Mohicans," and the fact that New York has so nobly and so successfully borne substantially all the burden of the diplomatic work of the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two When the President made the remarks which have been referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] in reference to putting the consular service upon a nonpartisan and nonsectional basis, he told the truth, and it seems peculiar that in receiving this act of courtesy and propriety on the part of the President the gentleman from Texas should now repeat the speech of the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], who originally called attention to the gross injustice in the way of distribution. What is the fact? Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] expect that the President of the United States, in putting the consular service upon a nonpartisan and nonsec tional basis, proposes at once to put it upon a sectional basis and thereby discharge from the public service men now in office because they come from a certain State-men who are performing the duties of their offices well and faithfully-in order to put men into office from another State who now know nothing about the subject? That would be something that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] himself would be one of the last men in the House to indorse. What is the situation? The President has, by an order through the Department of State, provided that hereafter in the appointments to the consular service they shall be made from a competitive examination; that there shall be assigned certain persons to take that competitive examination; that in making the assignment of these persons preference shall be given to those States which do not now have their numerical proportion of the consular appointments.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] be correct, that these people that are now in the consular service-and they are substantially the same ones who were in there prior to June 27 last-are discharging their duties faithfully and intelligently, then does not the bottom fall out of the propaganda we had here that this thing ought to be remodeled, because we have the consular service stocked with a lot of incapables?

Mr. MANN. I made no statement to begin with that they all are performing their service intelligently, although I have no doubt that that is, in the main, the fact. What I said was, Would the gentleman have a person who is performing the service intelligently discharged from the service merely because he comes from New York in order to place in the office a raw recruit from Texas or Missouri or any other State in the Union?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that I was told in the Department of State some time prior to that date in June to which he refers, as to the period of the adoption of this policy, that such a policy was in practice; that, as a matter of fact, they then made their selections upon a nonpartisan basis and a nonsectional basis. knew of several gentlemen from Texas who had special qualifications, who made an effort to get into the consular service and who failed to do it, and in my travels I have never seen a man in any of those posts anywhere in any country who was not a Republican.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that in the past it has been the practice of a Democratic Administration to appoint Democrats to consular offices and of a Republican Administration to appoint Republicans. But it is the very reason that the President has now initiated a new proposition, that these men shall be selected for examination regardless of politics, the only limitation on the selection being capacity, and local preference being given to those States which do not have their numerical proportion. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] in all sincerity ought to be here speaking words of praise about the first President, in recent times at least, who has endeavored in any way to put the consular service upon a nonsectional basis.

I think he is right. Now, it is the fact if to-day you go to the Department of State and ask for the assignment for examination of a person from New York State you will be told that he has no chance at all, because New York State's quota is overfilled. The gentleman complains about Illinois. I will say to the gentleman that forty-one representatives in the service is not in greater proportion than twenty-five Members of the House of Representatives in this body, so that the only place probably where there has been an excess has been in certain States where people are possibly a little more ambitious to go abroad; but the President, in the very purpose of making the consular service an able body, in aid of a commercial enterprise, has endeavored to remove from it a partisan and sectional aspect, and the gentlemen on this side of the House ought to be praising him for what he has done and is endeavoring to do and hold up his hands in this matter, as they would be doing in some other matters at present, instead of condemning him for doing the thing which they want him to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

REWRITING CONSULAR REGULATIONS.

For services, rewriting the consular regulations as authorized by the act of March 3, 1905, provided that the provisions of sections 170, 1763, 1764, and 1765, Revised Statutes, and section 3, act of June 20, 1874, shall not be applicable, the $3,000 appropriated by the said act of March 3, 1905, is hereby made available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph for the purpose of asking a question. Is it intended that this rewriting of the consular regulations shall be completed within the cost of $3,000?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any objection to so stating in the bill? Mr. COUSINS. None whatever.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment of this kind: "Provided, That the said work shall be completed within the limit of the said appropriation?"

Mr. COUSINS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order and offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "available," in line 18, page 21, add the following words:
"Provided, That said work shall be completed within the limit of this appropriation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

CIPHER CODE.

Cipher code, $5,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph. I will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no law providing for it, and I want to get some information. I will reserve the point of order. Mr. COUSINS. I will state frankly to the committee that this paragraph is subject to the point of order, technically speaking, being new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, what I want to find out from the chairman of the committee is this: Is it contemplated that this cipher code shall be prepared by somebody who has now employment in the State Department?

Mr. COUSINS. It is contemplated to employ an expert to assist those in the State Department. It is designed to have the very best and most modern code that can be devised.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is this expert already on the pay rolls of the Government?

Mr. COUSINS. No; there is no expert of that kind on the pay rolls of the Government. It will be necessary to employ somebody outside.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want to say I have no objection to the preparation of the new code, but if anybody who is connected with the State Department is to have the work I desire to enter my protest against it. I believe that the practice of allowing men who are already on the pay rolls of the Government to prepare digests, indexes, codes, and such work as that under special appropriations is wrong in principle and damnable in practice.

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that such is not contemplated in this at all. I will read what the Secretary says on that subject:

The cipher code of the Department was published in 1874, and is now entirely unfit for such a purpose. The two great needs for a cipher code, namely, secrecy and economy, are not served by the use of our present code. The great need is for a code on the model of the best commercial codes now in use, made with special reference to the particular needs of the Government, which is now scarcely served at all by the Department code. It is confidently believed that the saving to the Government in one year by the use of an up-to-date code will pay for the expense of preparing a new code. It is desired to employ experts in preparing a new code, and the appropriation of $5,000 for this purpose is earnestly urged.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am in perfect sympathy with the proposition to prepare a code, but I wanted to know whether somebody who is already in the employ of the Government is at Government expense to prepare this code and then receive double pay.

Mr. COUSINS. No; it could not be done.

Mr. MANN. I take it that the $5,000 is sufficient to complete the work?

Mr. COUSINS. We hope so.
Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to accept an amendment providing that said cipher will be completed in the limit of the appropriation hereby made?

Mr. COUSINS. Personally I would; but I think that might not be wise, as it might cost a little more and we would find the work crippled. It may cost less.

Mr. MANN. It appeals to me, from the reason that they are going to employ somebody on the outside to do this work. they find they can not do it, then it is a matter that Congress will still have jurisdiction over.

Mr. COUSINS. It would simply hold the matter up; that is

Mr. MANN. They think they can do it for $5,000, and we make an appropriation of $5,000, and we have a right to know whether that is the beginning of an expenditure or whether it is a completion of an expenditure. Mr. COUSINS. Oh, no; it is not a work of that character. It is not a work like the erecting of a building or anything of that sort. It is a simple matter that they think can be done for that money. I hope the gentleman will not ask for that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I will not. Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Long-WORTH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 22, at the end of line 5, insert:

"For the acquisition in foreign capitals of proper sites and buildings, which shall be used by the embassies and legations of the United States and for the residences of the ambassadors and envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary of the United States to foreign countries, to be expended by the Secretary of State, $500,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order upon that. Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that, Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the gentleman willing to waive his point of order for an amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] make a point of order against it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I thought that the Chair did not happen to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].
Mr. FITZGERALD. That is right.

Mr. Chairman, of course I admit that Mr. LONGWORTH. the point of order is well taken, and yet I think I am justified in asking the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to refrain from making it. It is a matter of history that practically all the improvements in the diplomatic service have been made by legislation on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. We even went so far as to raise our ministers to the rank of ambassadors by legislation on the diplomatic appropriation bill, and I think that for these reasons and because of the fact that so many Members of this House are convinced that this Government should own its legations and embassies, or, at least, provide leased premises for the use of our ministers and ambassadors, that we should be allowed to vote on this amendment. Of course the amount provided in this amendment is absolutely inadequate to provide more than possibly one or two residences. It is the principle of the Government owning and maintaining these residences that I advocate. I do not intend to spend more than a moment or two in advocacy of this amendment, because I have already on several occasions spoken at considerable length upon this subject. It would, in my opinion, take not less than ten times the amount provided in my amendment to do the thing that we are ultimately striving to do.

So I shall confine myself to discussing a few facts with rela-tion to our diplomatic service to-day. There is not a nation on earth anywhere approaching our wealth and power that does not pay to its diplomatic envoys from two to six times as much as we do to ours. One of two things must be true—either that their system is right or that our system is right. Either the system of compensation provided by foreign countries is grossly excessive or our compensation is grossly inadequate. Now, this is no longer a matter of argument, for it is a fact that many ministers and ambassadors from the great European nations have retired from the service simply and solely because they could not afford, with the compensation paid to them, to remain in it.

Only last year the English ambassador for this country asked for and received an increase of $5,000 a year in his salary, bringing it up, so I am informed, to $45,000 a year, in addition to which he receives his residence rent free, the costs of the upkeep of the embassy being paid by the British Government, and in addition to all this a substantial amount for entertaining. Whatever may have been said in the newspapers against the late ambassador, certainly it has never been charged that he lived with any undue display or in any other manner than as a dignified gentleman and in a manner to properly represent a great and friendly power. When we compare the compensation of the British ambassador here with that of our ambassador to England, who is paid $17,500 a year, with no other allowances whatever, the comparison becomes utterly and outrageously absurd, and simply brings us to the fact, which has not been and can not be denied, that under our system no one but a man of great wealth can under any conceivable circumstances represent this Government in high diplomatic office. It is a system that is utterly un-American, indefensible, and abhorrent to all our institutions.

We have spent some time this year in the discussion of the salaries of various Government officials, including our own. We have raised the salaries of the Vice-President, the Speaker of the House, and members of the Cabinet to $12,000 a year, and we have raised the salaries of Senators and our own to $7,500 a year. These increases, in my opinion, are just and proper. No salary paid to any official of this Government should be so large that the office should be sought for the money to be made out of it, and on the contrary no salary should be so small that men of ability, learning, and patriotism should be deterred from taking public office because they can not live properly upon their The test of fitness of any man to hold public office should be his intellectual parts, not his financial circumstances. While it is true that the salaries to-day paid to many of our important public officials are inadequate, and that many men otherwise eminently well fitted are deterred from going into public life because of the very small salaries attached to these offices, yet it is also true that these offices have always been held and are to-day held by men of limited financial resources.

The great men in the history of our country have been almost without exception poor men, or at least men of very moderate means. This is as it should be. It is in accord with the spirit means. of our institutions, that it is the man and not his money that should determine his fitness for public service. It is utterly abhorrent to our institutions that wealth should ever be a necessary qualification to holding any public office, and yet there is one office under this Government for holding which wealth and wealth alone is the one absolutely necessary qualification. No man, however great be his ability, however profound his learning, or of however great distinction in the service of his country, can be chosen to represent this country as ambassador or minister to any great power unless he be a rich man, and not only rich, but very rich. In other words, under our system, we have to-day a class of offices reserved only for men of wealth, the only absolutely necessary qualification for which is wealth. If George Washington or Thomas Jefferson or Abraham Lincoln were alive to-day, they could not hold the office of ambassador to Great Britain or to any other great post.

Is there any possible defense for such a system? Is it not time that Congress should do something to remedy this condition? Can we much longer continue to vote to support, or, rather, to neglect to vote to abolish, an office-holding aristocracy, an aristocracy more repugnant than one of blood, an aristocracy of wealth and wealth only?

If we are prepared to do this, the way is simple. We have only to provide compensation sufficient to pay the cost of our ambassadors or ministers living in foreign capitals in a way that the Americans demand that they shall live—in other words, a compensation large enough to pay the difference between the salary he now gets and his necessary expenses.

This could be done either directly or indirectly. The plan that I advocate would indirectly increase his compensation. It would provide a suitable and dignified residence and eliminate the item of rent, which is the principal expense to which he is The advantages of this method are that it would involve little, if any, ultimate cost to the Government, for suitable buildings which we would acquire in foreign capitals could not fail to advance in value.

This is true of all the legation property that we own to-day. It has, without exception, since its acquisition increased in And permit me to call attention to the fact that it was all acquired by legislation on appropriation bills. The same is true in the experience of almost every other country. To give one instance, I am informed on good authority that the ground upon which the British embassy in this city stands was purchased some years ago at the rate of 40 cents a square foot, and that property to-day, I think, in the estimation of experts, is valued at not less than $10 a square foot.

Another advantage of this plan would be that it would pro-Another advantage of this plan would be that it would provide a building which would always be the residence of the American minister or ambassador, a building over which the American flag would always fly, and which would properly represent the power and dignity and influence of this nation in the affairs of nations. The residence of the representative of this nation would then always be the same, and externally, at least, would not reflect the condition of the pocketbook of each particular incumbent. And last and most important of all, it would enormously enlarge the range of eligibility for these offices. It would create a condition under which men of moderate means might represent us abroad. It would go far toward making it possible for men of ability, learning, and patriotism to hold these offices, among the most important and dignified in the gift of the American people, regardless of what their financial circumstances may be

Mr. Chairman, I will again ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not think that it is consistent with his duty as a Member not to press his point of order? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio on this subject is always interesting, and he may be right. I do not propose to discuss at this time the question as to the advisability of housing our foreign ambassadors. I wish the gentleman from Ohio would stop for a moment and remember this: Our ambassadors abroad probably have no more expensive duty to perform in the way of living than ambassadors from abroad here. The ambassadors from abroad in Washington are put to no greater expense than the Cabinet officers of the President of the United States. A few years ago a young man without money and without influence came over from New York and went into one of the Departments here in a very humble capacity. He has been a Cabinet officer representing one Department of the Government, is a Cabinet officer representing another Department of the Government, and is about to be a Cabinet officer representing the chief Department of the Government. He is leading the simple life, and I often wish that some of the American representatives abroad would show to the world that they could lead the simple life. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a joint resolution passed by the legislature of the State of Illinois on the subject of limiting the flow of water from the Great Lakes through the Chicago Drainage Canal. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print in the Record a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Illinois. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Canal.]

Whereas the Congress of the United States is now considering the report of the International Waterways Commission; and

Whereas said report contains a recommendation that the amount of water to be diverted from the Great Lakes through the Chicago Drainage Canal be limited to 10,000 cubic feet per second; and

Whereas said limitation would in the future render futile the expenditure of $50,000,000 already expended by the sanitary district of Chicago and render impossible the completion of said project and endanger the health of the people of Illinois and of the city of Chicago; and

Chicago and render impossible the completion of said project and endanger the health of the people of Illinois and of the city of Chicago; and

Whereas the amount of water to be diverted for domestic and sanitary purposes should under no circumstances be limited by a treaty with a foreign power, or by any legislation to be enacted by Congress, thus placing the sanitary district of Chicago—organized to preserve the health of the people—upon the same plan as commercial enterprises organized for private gain: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the forty-fourth general assembly of the State of Illinois, convened in extraordinary session (the house of representatives concurring therein). That in any treaty to be hereafter entered into, no statement whatever, binding the trustees of the Sanitary District of Chicago, shall be made, and the local conditions of such canal and the volume of water to be accommodated therein should be left wholly and solely to the regulation of the Federal Government, as the conditions of the canal's drainage may require; and be it further Resolved. That in any legislation to be hereafter enacted by Congress a provision should be included permitting the Sanitary District of Chicago to use such water as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and such legislation, if any, should specifically provide that that portion of the report of the said International Waterways Commission referring to the Sanitary District of Chicago and the amount of water to be diverted through its channels should be entirely ignored; and be it further

Resolved. That the two Senators and the Members of Congress, representing this State be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to do all in their power to incorporate the provision above referred to in any legislation to be passed by Congress and prevent the incorporation of any statement in any treaty to be entered into with a foreign power placing any restriction upon the amount of water to be withdrawn through the drainage ca through the drainage canal of the Sanitary District of Chicago; and be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded immediately by the secretary of state to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State and to the President of the United States.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24537) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the

Mr. HULL. All points of order have been reserved.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take the time of the House on this bill. It has been very carefully considered by the committee. There is one item, however, that I would like to call the attention of Members to before the reading begins, and that is the provision at the beginning of the bill on the top of page 2, as follows:

Provided, That hereafter cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of June.

I want to call the attention of Members to the fact that now cadets go there at the time of the graduating exercises, when there is a great deal of confusion at the Academy, when one class is going out and all classes are engrossed in passing examinations, and then they go into camp for the summer months. The evidence was that if we would admit them the 1st of March it would cost the Government the pay of the cadets from the 1st of March to the 1st of June additional to what they now pay, but it gives the cadets three months of attendance which is of the greatest value in the preliminary studies at a time when they can lay the foundation for their course. The professors state that they believe it would be worth more to the cadets than any six months' time that they might have afterwards in the Academy. There are large numbers of these cadets all over the country who have not had the advantages that those cadets have from the city of being thoroughly pre-pared to enter the Academy. This would largely equalize that by being in the nature of preliminary instruction so that they would be entirely fitted to enter their course, and from the testimony given before us we would have fewer failures at the January examination than we have to-day.

I have no desire to take up any more time unless some gentleman desires to ask a question.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL.

Mr. KEIFER. I notice that the clause to which the gentleman referred, near the top of page 2, reads as follows:

Provided, That hereafter cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of June.

I want to inquire whether that would require cadets for this year to go there the 1st of March, or whether it was intended to have this apply after the year 1907?

It would apply after this year, for this bill may Mr. HULL. not become a law before the 1st of March. It does not prohibit their coming the 1st of June. The testimony was that if they had the privilege of being admitted in March they would all come that could possibly get there. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he thinks there is any question about this I would be willing to say "after the 1st day of June, 1907, all cadets may be admitted," etc.

Mr. KEIFER. I think some amendment of that kind should be offered, because there are appointees to cadetships at the Military Academy at West Point who are expecting to take their examinations in June, and probably they would feel unprepared to take it as early as the 1st of March.

Mr. HULL. There was no idea that they should be taken the 1st of March this year; this bill is for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1907.

Mr. KEIFER. As the bill reads the bill may become a law in February, and I am not sure but the construction would be that they should go the 1st of March, 1907.

Mr. HULL. Well, if there is any doubt about it, it can easily be corrected.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it ought to be corrected.
Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the bill be read.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any time myself, but I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, for ten years I have had a great deal of trouble in getting a country boy to go to West Point or to Annapolis. He must advance the cash to go, and if he falls all the expense of his going to the academy from Tennessee and back to Tennessee comes out of that country boy's pocket. He returns home broken-hearted and "broke. While making many speeches on this tobacco-tax question and against the tobacco trust last year, not only in the edge of Kentucky that touches on Tennessee, but in Tennessee and in my district, I on each occasion announced from the platform that I was looking for a farmer boy, regardless of whether the boy was a Democrat or Republican or whether his father was a Democrat or Republican, to appoint to West Point who was capable of entering West Point.

Finally away over in Stuart County, where Fort Donaldson is situated, away in the edge of that county somewhere, I heard of such a young man who was recommended as a highly ambitious boy and wanted the appointment. He had gone through the course at the Cumberland City Academy—a very bright young fellow and who was very ambitious to go. I immediately appointed him. I told him to "rub up" in his studies. His old professor kindly and with pride agreed to teach him and did so, so that he might be better prepared to enter West Point. When the time came for the young man to go to his examination he did not have money enough to pay his expenses to and from West Point. The result of it was that the young man was deeply disappointed. I knew nothing of his financial trouble until he wrote and told me-after the day to appear had passed. Stuart County, over 100 years old, had never received a Federal appointment or Federal recognition of any kind. I did not know the boy's politics, I do not know now and do not care. I can not even recall the young man's name. The alternate went. He was another country boy, from Robinson County, which had never received a Federal appointment before that I recall. All of the appointees from my district, except one, I believe, since the civil war have come from the city of Nashville or near Nashville, because they were educated and able to pay their way.

This young alternate went up to West Point, took his entrance examination, and passed except as to a physical defect, caused by being hurt once when a boy at school—a little dent on the side of his eye socket. He was "turned down," and went home to help take care of his father, who has reared sixteen or eighteen children on a farm at the edge of Robertson and Davidson counties. He paid his son's expenses. And now to my point.

I do think that Congress should provide a reasonable allowance for transportation and necessary expenses to cover such cases—that is, when these appointees fail. Here is that splendid young fellow, of fine character and high morals, with a firstrate country education, who had been "rubbed up," as it were, by this kind teacher at the academy, and yet who fails because, as he wrote me, he did not have money enough to go to West Point and pay expenses. This game and manly alternate failed—both tried to help their country and themselves incidentally.

Now, whenever we have had a war we have always had to go to the country to get a large portion of our soldiers, and some of the best soldiers that we have ever had have come from the counties of Stewart and Robertson.

The soldiers who fought the battle of New Orleans in a large measure came from this section of the country. They came from the mountains of East Tennessee and middle Tennessee, and their fathers were poor people. They have had large families, and it is a hard thing for them to educate their children sufficiently high for the boys to even have a plain education and at the same time take care of their wives and families. college country-reared boy is the exception. I have alluded to this condition in a general way before. To aid such appointees would not take very much public money. It would only be done in the cases of the boys who are not able to pay their expenses and fail. Suppose the boy is an orphan boy—and I would rather appoint an orphan boy than one who was not an orphan what chance has he to go to West Point if appointed? God knows I have tried for ten years to get a boy appointed from my district, one who was reared and educated in the country and who wants to educate himself to fight for his country. For ten years I have tried and failed. I have made five or six appointments from the country, and one of the reasons why the boys fail if educated is that the country boy has not the means to defray the expense of going to and from West Point or Annapolis and at the same time pay some teacher to coach him in the five or six months that intervene between the time of his appointment and the date that he must stand his examination.

I hope that the intelligent and patriotic and industrious chairman of this committee and its members will think about what I have said and cure this evil. I speak from my own personal knowledge and experience as a Member of this House, and I do think that a great Government that calls on these boys, whose parents have been called on ever since the beginning almost of the Government, should pay a reasonable sum for necessary expenses to these young men, who, in the morning of their ambition and the heyday of their hope, wish to prepare to serve their country in fighting its battles upon land and sea. [Applause.] We call on them in time of war to defend our homes and the flag, bear the burdens of war, let us make it possible for them to share in the honors we distribute in time of peace. [Applause, 1

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of cadets, $260,000: Provided, That hereafter cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of June.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on

Mr. KEIFER. I propose to amend it.

I want to ask a question, if I may.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman had better ask the question before I make my proposition.

Mr. MANN. What effect will this have this spring in reference to appointments to West Point?

Mr. KEIFER. That is the very question that I am dealing

Mr. HULL. We have the impression that it would have none, that it would apply after this year, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] wants to guarantee that, and he proposes to amend it so as to fix the date.

Mr. MANN. Is that satisfactory? Mr. HULL. Absolutely. No one expected it to apply this year.

Mr. MANN. So that there will be no question about the amendment.

Mr. HULL. No; it would be impractical to make it apply this year. This bill probably will not pass before the 1st of Mr. MANN. The reason I ask is because the bill in effectof course it is not mandatory-says that the cadets may be appointed the 1st of March, and I did not know whether the gentleman had a construction from the War Department as to whether they would be required to be appointed or not.

Mr. HULL. No; 'I have not. I want to answer this one We had a construction from the superintendent of the academy that it would apply after this year. That is all.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order. Mr. HULL. This will do no harm.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, my proposition is to amend line 2 on page 2, the proviso, by striking out of that line the word "hereafter," and then to add in line 4, after the words "New York," the words "after the year 1907."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the word "hereafter;" and in line 4, after the words "New York," insert "after the year 1907;" so that the paragraph will read:

"Provided, That cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., after the year 1907 may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of June."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to discuss at any length-

Mr. HULL. That is entirely satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of one counting machine for use in the office of the quartermaster and disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, and cabinet for same, to be immediately available and to be purchased without advertising, $425.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, page 26, amend by inserting an additional item, as follows:

"For maintaining the children's school, the Superintendent of the Military Academy being authorized to employ the necessary teachers, $3,520."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that. Mr. HOLLIDAY. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. HULL. I will reserve the point of order if the gentleman desires to speak on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the point of order on the amendment.

I raise the point of order.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman wishes to make a speech, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL. . I reserved the point of order on account of the gentleman's desire to make a speech.

Mr. HAY. I did not know that.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make a speech, but I simply wanted, in this connection, to present a few facts in regard to this school at West Point. There are 250 children of school age. Nearly all of those children are the children of enlisted men. They have a schoolhouse there, and the only teachers they have are enlisted men who are detailed to teach. The nearest schoolhouse from that is at Clinton Falls, about 1.6 miles from the place where the soldiers' barracks are at West Point. The authorities there have been notified frequently that the school authorities at Clinton Falls are not willing to take the children of West Point. They have not the facilities for them, and they have not room for them, and they protested not only to the authorities at West Point, but to the Board of Visitors last year against the children of the reservation going to the Clinton Falls school, and there is no other in that vicinity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this Government of ours is big enough and rich enough to hire teachers for these 250 children. It is inconceivable to me that little girls of tender age should have to be taught by enlisted men. There is no other such condition in the United States, so far as I can learn, and we ought to have women teachers there, especially for the little children. And for a mere paltry sum we can hire them. The only argument I have heard against the proposition is that these soldiers, who are paid sometimes extra-duty pay, ought to hire the teachers themselves. Well, Mr. Chairman, this argument could be made anywhere. The workingmen are now receiving good wages, and we could make the argument that we ought to abolish taxation for maintaining schools and let everybody hire his own teacher. I believe that the education of the young of this country is a governmental function. I think a State, where it is possible to do so, should take care of the education of the young, and when it is not possible for the State to do it, when it becomes a part of the nation, then the nation ought to take care of the children of its defenders.

It has been sometimes said that this may involve the building of schools at other places. I do not know whether it will or not, and I do not care. If it is necessary, we should make an appropriation to build a school at every post where there are children of soldiers to be educated and to hire teachers to edu-

Mr. Chairman, there is a schoolhouse at West Point now built by Government funds. The plan which we have adopted and for which we are making appropriations to-day contemplates building a very fine schoolhouse and an elaborate one, not for the purpose of educating cadets, but for the purpose of teaching the children upon the reservation, and yet we have the anomalous condition, after putting several thousand dollars into a schoolhouse, of refusing to appropriate to pay the teachers. Now, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. This is a small sum, a mere trifle, a bagatelle. We are appropriating in a lump sum twelve hundred thousand dollars for buildings at West Point, and it seems to me that it is not a proper thing for the Government to keep the children of those soldiers in ignorance, and that we ought to make an appropria-

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY] yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask my colleague on the committee if he would be willing to accept an amendment providing similar appropriations for every post throughout this country and begin the policy thereby of establishing schools at

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would say in answer to my colleague from Texas that I am willing to support a proposition to build a school at every Army post in the United States where there is a sufficient number of children to warrant it. I do not think it would be appropriate or germane to add that to this proposition, because we are legislating now upon the academy bill and not for the Army at large. It is a governmental function, as I said before; it is a part of the general plan. It is a part of the theory of this Government that the Government should educate those children, and the Government of the United States is setting a mighty bad example when it refuses to educate the 250 children of soldiers who are now at West Point. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, just one word and not to go into the matter fully. The whole theory of Army legislation has always been that we legislated for those belonging to the Army and not for the families of those who are in the Army, and if you are going to extend it now and include in the Army all the women and children who may hereafter be attached to it by marriage or otherwise, you are entering upon a very broad scope of legislation.

The gentleman says it is a function of the Government to provide education. I think that is true, but his mechanics in his district own their little homes, pay their taxes, and help to support the common schools of his section of the country, and so with every other section. These soldiers at West Point are while every other section. These soldiers at West Point are almost invariably extra-duty men, getting not only the pay of the soldier, but they get quarters for themselves and their wives, something that is not done at other places, and they get their rations, they get their allowances, and they get their extra-duty pay; and they are better paid one year with another without loss of time than the average workingman in the United States of America. That does not apply so much to other posts as it does to this, but if you will look at this bill you will see there is one whole detachment on extra-duty pay, and a large part of the bill deals with extra duty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman pardon a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

WILLIAMS. Has not the State of New York some schools right there to which these people can go?

Yes; but it is a hardship on the little village to take them. The Government has a building now assigned, and all the expense these men would have, in lieu of paying taxation—for they have nothing to pay for medical attendance for themselves and families—would be to pay these teachers. Now, if you commence it at West Point, where the conditions are away beyond favorable conditions of soldiers in any other part of the country, you might as well recognize that you are entering upon Army legislation that will not stop at West Point, but will gradually absorb every woman and child connected with the Army. I am not in favor of it, and I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of increasing the efficiency of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., and to provide for the enlargement of buildings, and for other necessary work of improvement in connection therewith, authorized in acts of Congress approved June 28, 1902 (Public, 181), April 28, 1904 (Public, 192), March 3, 1905 (Public, 137), and June 28, 1906 (Public, 310), in accordance with the general plan approved by the Secretary of War January 27, 1904, to remain available until expended, $1,200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. wish to inquire whether the rebuilding and enlargement of this building will be completed within the limit of cost?

Mr. HULL. These buildings are part of the plan adopted by Congress, and I suppose the buildings will all have to be completed within the estimate formed for the whole and for each of the buildings. The committee has only had a submission made on the building they wanted to build this year. They asked for $1,500,000, but, after hearings, we have only provided for $1,200,000, which will be ample for the next fiscal year. Now, whether all the buildings will be completed within the estimate or not the gentleman is as able to say as I. We can only say this, that the bill limiting the total cost of the improvement of the academy provided it should not go beyond the amount of the plan which was adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was in the original provision.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And after the plans were prepared, it necessitated an increase in the limit of cost by several millions

Mr. HULL. We increased last year the total amount of cost for the entire completion of the plans and provided it should not exceed the amount so fixed. Now, these buildings will not all be completed under this appropriation. It is a continuing contract.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any indication that it will be necessary to increase the limit of cost of these buildings?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; but this appropriation will not complete the buildings begun now. This is all that can be used in the next fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When is it contemplated these buildings will be completed?

Mr. HULL. No time has been fixed, but the number of buildings and the character of improvements were settled upon by the adoption of the plan the Secretary of War submitted to us, and the total cost of the entire improvement is limited.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Iowa have any idea when these improvements will be completed?

Mr. HULL. I should say, taking the rate at which they are going on, it will be two years after this.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, after a conference with the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 2 of the bill, and ask unanimous consent to insert before the words that I asked before to have inserted, and which were inserted, in line 4, the words "for admission;" so that it will read "that cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., for admission after the year 1907 may be admitted on the 1st day of March instead of the 1st day of June."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman restate his request?
Mr. KEIFER. I only desire to make clear what I supposed was clear, but about which some doubt is expressed as to the amendment which was inserted on page 2, line 4. The object is to make the cadets appointed to go to the academy after this year and fix it so that they go on there on the 1st of March. year and hx it so that they go on there on the 1st of March. My amendment allowed it to apply to persons appointed after this year. So I desired it to be. They may be appointed to the academy the next year, and this is only to make it clear, so that it will apply to cadets appointed to the Military Academy, at West Point, N. Y., for admission after the year 1907, may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of Lyne.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first conclude the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total buildings and grounds, $1,236,025.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to recur to page 2 of the bill and submit an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "New York," insert the words "for admission;" so that it will read:
"Provided, That cadets appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., for admission after the year 1907, may be admitted on the 1st day of March in place of the 1st day of June."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not even reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What I wanted to ask the gentleman from Ohio was this: Why do you want the thing done?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question, I find that the Military Committee has left this proviso, which left it in doubt as to whether it would apply generally to the appointments that were made in this year. But I do not want it to apply, because some of us have cadets appointed that would not be prepared to go there until June, and if this goes into effect as amended let it go into effect next year.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with the gentleman, if the thing is to be done at all. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa why he wants it done at all?

Mr. HULL. I tried to explain that, when the matter was up, and succeeded well enough so that no point of order was made on it, and it was agreed to by the Committee of the Whole House. The reason is that if cadets can enter on the 1st of March, they will get the benefit of three months' extra tuition, and the evidence was that this would be in the nature of a pre-paratory school for those who have not had the advantages of the best education, and that they would have more benefit from their summer studies in camp than if they went there on the 30th of May, entered on the 1st of June, and immediately went into camp without the preparatory three months' study.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Must they not already have the qualifications to enter before they can get in?

Mr. HULL. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that a great many who have entered heretofore on the 1st of June. when it has come to the 1st of January, on account of not having the benefit of proper preparatory studies, have failed to pass the mid-winter examinations. The instructors all believe that with this additional three months there will be a considerable decrease in the number of those unable to keep up with their classes. A great many go there who are barely able to enter. They are boys who have not had the advantages of the best schools. They are ambitious and anxious. They strain a point to get in and then fall down at the end of the first six months. It is believed this will make it so that they will—a much larger proportion of them—be able to continue through their course.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to line 23, page 5, to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "on." It is a misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to recur to line 23, page 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 23, the second word, change "of" to "on."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments and with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24537 the Military Academy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and

On motion of Mr. Hull, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT STREET RAILWAY TRACKS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the routine morning business, if there shall be no appropriation bill under consideration, I will ask the Senate to further consider the bill (S. 6147) authorizing changes in certain street-railway tracks within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. This is the bill which proposes to extend the street railway tracks to the Union Station. It is a matter which has become acute, and I hope to be able to have the bill passed at that time.

Be it enacted, etc., That the compensation of the appraiser of mer-chandise at the port of New York shall be $8,000 per annum.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the appropriation bill now on the table be taken up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. If that bill is up, I desire to state that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] has given notice that he wishes to speak this morning, but in view of this appropria-tion bill being on the table, and as it has been here for some time, he has very kindly consented to defer his speech until after the bill is disposed of.

Mr. BERRY. I can not hear the Senator from Illinois. Mr. BACON. There is so much conversation in the Hall it is impossible to hear what is going on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Business will be suspended until the Senate is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Arkansas says he did not hear what I said. I stated that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIOGE] desires to speak this morning, but the appropriation bill having been here for some time, he has very kindly con-sented to allow the appropriation bill to be disposed of before he enters upon the speech he desires to make. Of course I understand that the appropriation bill has the right of way, but I like to be accommodating to Senators, as I was yesterday, when they ask such favors.

Mr. BERRY. Do I understand that the appropriation bill goes on now or does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; it goes on now. Mr. CULLOM. The appropriation bill is now up for consideration.

bill did not have the right of way, of course, in view of the fact that it has been on the table so long, I would be very glad to yield. I would yield, under the circumstances, even if it was not a matter of right upon the part of the Senator from Illinois. I have been assured, however, by the Senator from Illinois and Senators on both sides of the Chamber that the bill will probably not take very long, probably not more than until half past 1 o'clock. I merely desire to express the hope that that is true, for the reason that the remarks which I wish to submit to the Senate were to have been submitted a week ago, and were then postponed until Monday on account of the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver], and from Monday until to-day because of the Brownsville discussion.

I am very glad to yield to the Senator, but I again express the hope that the appropriation bill will not take longer than until half past 1.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to make a remark or two.

This bill passed the House and was considered by the committee of the Senate and reported to the Senate and passed the Senate and again went to the House. The House made an amendment to it, which is in the nature of an increase in the salaries of Cabinet officers, Speaker of the House, and Vice-President, and the Members of both Houses of Congress. first part of that provision was in the bill as sent to the Senate, and was disagreed to by the Senate. The House has amended it, and disagreed to the other amendments of the Senate. It is back here in that shape.

So far as our committee is concerned, we desire that that subject shall be submitted to the Senate itself for consideration, and it is before the Senate on the question of agreeing to the House amendment respecting these several salaries, and on my motion. I moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment as made, and that is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let it be read.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Colorado desires to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the action of the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 18, 1907.

Resolved, That the House disagrees to all the amendments of the Senate, except amendment No. 222, to the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, and agrees to amendment No. 222 with the following amendment:

Omit the matter stricken out by the said amendment and insert the Omit the matter stricken out by the compensation of the Speaker following:

"That-on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and the heads of Executive Departments, who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each, and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each."

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.
Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the report is now open to an amendment in this body-that is, that particular part of it which has just been read relating to the increase of salaries?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is open to amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I have an amendment to offer, which I will offer now

Mr. BERRY. I trust the Senator will not offer the amendment until after I finish my remarks.

sires me to wait until he finishes his speech before I offer the amendment. I will do so. Mr. MALLORY. Very well. The Senator from Arkansas de-

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I saw it stated in one of the city papers this morning that I was going to speak in favor of an increase of the salaries of Members of Congress. In view of the fact that I have always been opposed to such an increase and have stated it more than once on the floor of the Senate-one time, I remember, as long as five years ago-and that I have been against it continually, and on Monday last, when the bill was up, I stated—and it is in the Record—that I was opposed to it, I regret that the newspaper men were misinformed. What remarks I shall make, and it can hardly be called a speech, shall be against an increase of the salaries.

I regret that the Senator from Illinois has determined to have this amendment disposed of in a way different from the usual method of the Committee on Appropriations. So far as I re-Mr. BERRY. Very well, Mr. President.

member, wherever a general appropriation has come to the Senmr. BEVERIDGE. Even if under the rules the appropriation ate and amendments were offered to it—and there always are numerous amendments-and went back to the House and they disagreed to the amendments in whole or in part or agreed to an amendment with an amendment, in all such cases, I think, heretofore when the bill came back to the Senate the rule was for the Senate to insist upon its amendments and let the bill go Why a difference should be made in this parto conference. ticular bill I do not understand.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly

Mr. CULLOM. As I understand it, the same course has been frequently followed. I want to say that, so far as I was concerned in having anything to do with it, my chief purpose in taking this course is to have the Senate settle the question whether this increase of salary shall be made. Instead of going to conference to be considered by the conferees, it is only open and fair that the Senate itself should have a vote on that particular question, so as to settle it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Illinois that it ought to be settled by the Senate and by a vote of the Senate; but after the bill had gone to conference and the other amendments to it had been disposed of it would have been easy to have reported back this amendment, leaving it to the Senate, the conferees declining to take the responsibility. However, that is not very material except that it has precipitated this matter somewhat, and it looks like in a hurried way at a time before it was generally expected.

Mr. President, I wish to state the history of the bill as connected with this amendment. I presume it is in order for me to state, as they appear in the RECORD proceedings of the House of Representatives. This is the general legislative appropriation bill which was passed by the House of Representatives. tives. While it was pending in the House an amendment was offered to increase the salaries of Senators and Members to $7,500 a year, not to take effect, however, as I remember it, until the Sixty-first Congress. There was a yea-and-nay vote had upon that proposition in the House of Representatives, and it was beaten by a majority of eighty-one, I think. The House, however, did put a provision in the bill which provided for the increase of salaries of the Vice-President, the Speaker of the House, and the Cabinet officers to $12,000. When the Senate committee met there was no question before that committee in regard to the increase of salaries of Senators and Members, but the committee unanimously disagreed to the provision in the bill providing for an increase of the salaries of the Vice-President, the Speaker, etc. The bill was reported back to the Senate, and the Senate made no effort whatever to place this provision in regard to Senators and Members of the House upon There was no amendment offered in the committee, none offered in the Senate, to make this increase.

When the bill went back to the House they disagreed to all other amendments of the Senate, except the amendment which struck out the increase of salary for the Vice-President and Speaker, etc. To that they agreed with an amendment. They proceeded to strike it all out, to retain the provisions in regard to the increase for the Vice-President, the Speaker, and the Cabinet officers exactly as they were put there before, and to add to it the provision that is now under consideration-to increase the salaries of Senators and Members of the House to

The RECORD shows that on the question of adopting this amendment in the House of Representatives no yea-and-nay vote was taken; that only 34 Members, I think, rose to second the demand for the yeas and nays; the Speaker declared that was not a sufficient number, and it passed without a yea-andnay vote, the difference between the other amendment which they had voted down and this being that the other amendment, I think, did not go into effect until the Sixty-first Congress, while this takes effect in the Sixtieth Congress, on the 4th day of March next. Those are the facts connected with this bill.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in a matter so delicate as the one of Members of Congress raising their own salaries, it would have been far better if it had been in a separate bill, thoroughly considered, and a direct vote by the yeas and nays taken in each of the Houses to see how they stood on the ques-tion. That is my view of it. However, I have no desire to criticise the other House, because they have a right to take such procedure in regard to the passage of amendments to bills as they desire.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I am opposed to this increase, and have always been opposed to it, for several reasons. In the first place, I deny that $5,000 is grossly inadequate as compensation to a Senator or Member of the House. I deny in the other House and in the Senate than we have to-day?

the statement so often made that they can not live on it. Numbers of them have lived on it for years. But a few years ago, I do not remember how many, Senators and Members received the same compensation and were compelled out of their own pockets to pay for the clerk hire and for the messenger service, whatever it was, that their business demanded. Since that time in the Senate a clerk with a salary of $1,800 a year is allowed each Senator, and each Senator is allowed a messenger at $900 a year; so the least of them-those who are not chairmen of committees—have a secretary and a messenger, whose pay combined amounts to $2,700. That has taken off each Senator the burden of paying for his clerk hire and for his messenger

In this bill there is a provision for an allowance of $1,500 for each Member of the House of Representatives for clerk hire; so that Representatives, as well as Senators, do not any longer have to pay out money, as they once did, for the services of a clerk.

I repeat that, while there are a number of Senators here who doubtless could make more than $5,000 a year, yet, Mr. President, I am inclined to the opinion that, taking the other House and the Senate together, there is not one-half of them who ever has made or who ever could make $5,000 a year if engaged in any other business. That is my judgment about it, though I may be wrong.

As I said before, while it is true that a Senator or a Member of the other House can not save money from his salary, it is not true that he can not live upon it.

Besides that, Mr. President, it ought to be remembered that, as a rule, it is scarcely otherwise than that we are not in session for more than twelve months in every two years. The short session lasts but three months, and the long session rarely ever lasts over nine months. That would make but one-half the time of a Congress only that Senators and Members of the other House are required to be here. In the meantime they have the right, or at least they exercise the right, of practicing law or engaging in any other business which they may see proper. They are enabled in that time to increase the amount of their salary.

Again, when I am told that for members of the Senate and of the other body the salary of $5,000 a year is wholly insufficient, I will say that I do not think the statement is borne out by the facts. But even if the salary be too small, I insist that an increase of 50 per cent on that salary can not be justified.

It is often said that there has been an increase in the cost of living. That is true; but every clerk in the Government Departments, every carrier of rural mail throughout the United States, all mail clerks, many of whom stand on their feet for ten or twelve hours continuously during the twenty-four, have likewise to pay for the increased cost of living. They, too, can come with the same complaint and say that their salaries ought to be increased. Indeed, I see that the Department clerks are now asking for an increase of 20 per cent, as are also the carriers engaged in the rural free-delivery service. If the cost of living has been increased to Senators and Members of the other House, it has also been increased to every other man engaged in any kind of business, Government employees as well as others; but though the cost of living has increased, Mr. President, those men have not the power to increase their salaries as we propose in this bill, and have the power to do, to increase our salaries. I think that is another reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

But the main reason, the principal reason, the greatest reason for my opposition to the proposition is that, as to any man who knew what the salary was when he came here, who sought the office and urged the people to elect him to it, who knew precisely what the law allowed, I do not believe that it lies in his mouth to say, "I can not live on this salary, and I propose to vote to take money out of the Treasury to increase it.

It seems to me that it is not a proper thing for any man to say that he will take this money while others claim that they are equally entitled to an increase; that we alone should have increased salaries, although we agreed to serve at the salary fixed at the time of our election, and every man here and in the other House knew what it was at the time he accepted the position. I say, under the circumstances, that everyone ought to be held and bound by that understanding.

Besides that, there is no reason on earth, so far as I can see, why any man here who is unable to live on the salary and who it is claimed can make so much more money at home should remain here. If he does not desire to stay, he can resign at any minute or any hour.

Will any Senator stand upon this floor and say that he believes that a salary of $7,500 per annum will get a better class of men

Does he think that the ability of Senators or Representatives or the efficiency of the service here will be increased by increasing salaries? I do not think so.

Mr. President, this is a matter for each Senator to settle for himself. I have felt constrained to give my reasons because of the peculiar surroundings. I wanted it known and have it go into the Record that this is no new idea with me, as I think every member of the Committee on Appropriations will bear witness. For years I have always opposed such an increase on every occasion, even when I had five years of service ahead of me in the Senate at the time when I made such opposition.

But it is said, Mr. President, that the people of the country are demanding this increase; that they are urging it; that they are pressing their representatives in this body and in the other to vote for it. Some of the men who voted "nay" on the first vote in the House of Representatives, when the yeas and nays were called, have told me that they thereby incurred the displeasure of their constituents at home, who did not approve of their voting "nay." It may be, Mr. President—I do not know— that the fear if they continued to vote "nay," as no doubt their judgment dictated was the right vote, may have been one reason why there were only 34 Representatives who then stood up on the demand for the yeas and nays—the fear that they might be criticised for voting "nay" on this proposed increase of compensation. I do not say that that is the reason, but I say that the RECORD shows the fact to be as I have stated.

I simply desire to repeat once more, Mr. President, that I want each and every Senator to understand that I am not here to try to dictate in any way or to assume the right to criticise his action, whatever his vote may be. I could have, and can have, but one purpose in view, and that is the good name of the Senate and the House of Representatives. I think that this proposed amendment ought not to be passed and I think, if it is passed, the Senate would be flooded with applications for increase of salaries by every clerk and every mail carrier, by all the officials in the consular service, and practically by every man who is in the service of the United States. It is impossible for me to see how any Senator who supports this amendment can refuse to give to them the same increase on the ground that the cost of living is increased, that being the reason why he votes it to himself.

But, Mr. President, the Senate must settle this matter for itself. I simply wanted to give the reasons why I will not vote for the amendment. There has never been a day in the twentytwo years I have served here when I would have voted for such a proposition.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment—and that motion takes precedence of the motion to agree to it—by striking out all after the word "each;" that is, all that part of the amendment which relates to the salaries of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico. send the amendment to the desk, and upon that amendment I shall have a few words to say, and only a few.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out from the amendment of the House of Representatives the following language:

and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have been curious and somewhat interested in looking into the compensation paid to the members of various legislative bodies in different countries of the world. I find, by examining into this question, that we are to-day receiving a higher rate of compensation than is allowed to the members of any legislative body in the world.

To the members of Parliament in Great Britain, as is well known, no compensation is paid, while in the Congress of the United States Senators and Representatives receive $5,000 per annum each, with 20 cents mileage, counting each way, coming to Washington and returning to their homes.

Washington and returning to their homes.

The senators and deputies of France receive only $1,800 per the senators and deputies on the state railroads. The annum, with free transportation on the state railroads. members of the upper and lower houses of Hungary receive $1,000 per annum and $333.33 for house rent. In the Netherlands the members of the first chamber who do not reside at The Hague during the sessions receive $4 a day, and the members of the second chamber receive $800 per annum and actual traveling expenses. In the German Parliament or Reichstag the members are allowed a compensation of $800 per annum, provided they are in attendance. In Italy there is no compen-sation for the members, but free transportation is given them. In Sweden the compensation of the members is $327 per annum, with mileage for each session. In Greece the members receive a compensation of $360 per annum. In Belgium the members of the lower house receive a compensation of $800 per annum, of the lower house receive a compensation of $800 per annum, with free transportation, while the members of the senate serve without compensation. In Portugal the members receive no compensation. In Austria actual traveling expenses are allowed, and a per diem compensation of $4.16. In Switzerland the members of the lower chamber receive a per diem of $3.80 and have free transportation. In Norway the members of the Odelsthing and Lagthing receive a per diem allowance of $4.29, with their actual traveling expenses and medicines and medical attendance while they are in session. In Denmark the members of the Landsthing and Folkething are allowed a per diem compensation of about $2.40. In Roumania the members of the senate and house receive a per diem of $4.75 when in actual attendance. In Bulgaria, if living at the place of session, the members receive a per diem of $3, and, if living out of the place of session, traveling expenses are allowed and a per diem of $4.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.
Mr. SCOTT. In comparing the salaries paid to members of legislative bodies in foreign countries and the salaries paid here, does not the Senator find the proportion to be about the same as that between the wages paid to laborers in foreign countries and the wages paid to laborers in this country?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. Mr. President, I have called attention to these figures not so much to compare the amount of salaries paid in each of these different countries with the amount paid here, but for the purpose of calling the fact to the attention of the Senate that throughout all these rates of compensation runs the same central idea, that it is not intended to pay the members of these legislative bodies a salary, as you would to a hired man or a clerk or employee or the head of a department, but it is simply to give them a sufficient compensation to pay their actual expenses.

The position we occupy is distinct from that of perhaps any ther public functionaries. We are not simply here hired out to other public functionaries. We are not simply here hired out to work for the Government for a given amount of salary, but we are here because, first of all, we feel our position to be a post of honor, one of public duty; and if the Government of the United States gives us sufficient compensation for a modest living, I think we are amply compensated. Our position in this respect is very much like that of the soldier in our Volunteer Army in time of war. No one will contend that the compensation which the Government pays the soldier in such an emergency is a sufficient compensation for the actual work he performs and the danger he incurs. Most of them would receive more if engaged in almost any other employment. But they agree to accept it because it is a great public duty, and the Government gives them a modest and moderate compensation not at all commensurate with the work, but by way of aiding them to support their families in comfort.

In our case I am aware of the fact-and we can not disguise it or mince matters here—that we are not here like great diplomats from foreign countries, who feel it to be a part of their duty to enter into the social field, expend liberally in various directions and in great social functions, thereby incurring large expense. There are some of our brethren here who are fortu-nate enough to be able to enter that field and to follow in the course of such diplomats. We are very glad that we have such members in our body; we are very glad that they are able to occupy that position; but the most of us are not in that position, and we ought to be content that the Government of the United States gives us a compensation to provide us with a modest and respectable living, and not be ambitious to shine like diplomats in the social world.

There are other fields, Mr. President, where we could increase salaries, in my opinion, to much better advantage. our poor rural mail carriers, who only receive a paltry compensation of $720 a year for their services, and they have each to furnish from two to three horses. We had better take the amount it is proposed to confer upon members of this body in the way of increased salary and confer it upon the rural mail carriers, instead of adding it to our salaries.

If this had been a modest increase of a thousand dollars a year, so as to make the compensation $6,000, it would not have been so bad; but it is proposed by this amendment to increase our salaries 50 per cent, to add to them $2,500 per annum each. I feel, Mr. President, in view of the position I occupy here, in view of the honor that the people of my State have conferred upon me, that, if the Government pays me a sufficient compensation so that I can live here and at home in a modest way, I should be quite content. I do not want to be degraded into the mere position of an employee who is simply working for the sake of a salary.

There is another thing that came to my attention in connection with the Panama Canal. It seems to run through some spheres of this Government and through other circles that a man's usefulness, a man's value in the public service, is measured by the compensation you give him; that the bigger the salary you put up the greater the results you will obtain. I think our experiences go to show that it is not always the highest-priced men or the men who get these enormous salaries who perform the most valuable service for the Government. We find many times in the Departments here an humble clerk, receiving a salary of from twelve to fourteen or fifteen or sixteen hundred dollars a year who performs more valuable service than the head of his division, or the bureau officer, or even the head of the Department, in some instances.

To my mind, Mr. President, above all things else, it seems to me degrading the high status of the position of a Senator or Representative in Congress to put us on such a basis that we are simply here working to get a salary, simply seeking the office for the sake of getting a large salary. I can not for the life of me concur in that idea.

As I said at the outset, this is a post of honor. We are not here as mere hired men of the Government. Our value here and the efficiency of our service is never measured by the amount of salary. In the early days of the Republic, when the salaries were much more modest than they are to-day, I think nobody would contend that the public service was not as faithfully performed by the Members of the two Houses of Congress as it is to-day.

Mr. President, I trust the amendment that I propose may be adopted. I have no intention to take up the time of the Senate further, though there is a good deal I should like to say on the subject; but in view of the fact that my friend from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] is about to enter upon the discussion of a very important bill, I feel unwilling to delay the Senator any further on account of this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust, Mr. President, that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] may not be agreed to. I am one of those who have no fear of doing justice to myself and my associates as I see the matter of justice. I have been of opinion all through my public career, and especially of late years, that the compensation given to members of the two Houses of Congress was utterly inadequate, and I have never hesitated to give expression to that view.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that if added compensation is to be given it can only be given by the Congress itself.
That is the only remedy within our reach. The First Congress That is the only remedy within our reach. submitted a proposed amendment to the Constitution in these

No law varying the compensation for the services of the Senators and Representatives shall take effect until an election of Representa-tives shall have intervened.

That proposed amendment, Mr. President, was defeated in the First Congress, and it was defeated by the votes of some men who had helped make the Constitution itself.

Salaries of Members of Congress were first fixed by the act of September 22, 1779. Salaries were changed March 10, 1796, March 19, 1816, June 22, 1818, August 16, 1856, and again in 1866, when the present compensation was fixed. The act of July 28, 1866, reads as follows:

That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto mileage at the rate of 20 cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session, etc.

Mr. President, every one of the acts to which I have called attention were retroactive acts. That, I think, is a matter that has possibly not been called to the attention of Senators as a rule. The act under which we are now drawing our salaries provided retroactive pay from March of one year to July 28 of That feature is eliminated from the bill now under consideration, and if the proposed increase is allowed it will be the first law on the subject that has ever received the approval of Congress and the Chief Executive that did not carry back pay in some form or to some extent.

It will be remembered that on the 3d day of March, 1873, an act was passed known as the "salary-grab act," which increased the compensation from $5,000 to $7,500. That act was approved on the 3d day of March, one day before the adjournment of Congress, as I remember, and it carried back pay for that Congress. It attracted the attention of the country because of that fact. A great uproar was raised, and at the next Congress the act was repealed and the act of 1866 was reenacted, under which act we are now receiving our compensation. The First Congress, Mr. President, fixed its salary; the Second Congress fixed its salary, and so on from the foundation of the Government until the present time. That being the fact, it will be seen that the proposed legislation is no innovation.

Mr. President, I have been a somewhat attentive student so far as this matter is concerned. I have read the papers of the country, and I think I have some knowledge of the public sentiment on this question. Perhaps I ought not to undertake to speak for any other State than the one which I in part represent, but I am pleased to be able to state that so far as I know there has been no discordant sound in the State of New Hampshire. The people of that State and the press of that State have, with a unanimity that has been exceedingly gratifying, stated that the proposed increase was an act of simple justice and that the law ought to pass.

I have here a little country newspaper, Mr. President, edited by an old soldier—the Bristol Enterprise—published in a small town in my State, and in a brief editorial I find this:

Senator Gallinger has opened the fight in the Senate for the increase of the salaries of Members of Congress to $7,500. This is none too large, and, indeed, $10,000 would only be reasonable.

I think that every newspaper in New Hampshire, certainly every one that has come to my attention, has said that the proposed increase was one that ought to be granted and to which no exception ought to be taken.

We have been increasing salaries, Mr. President, all along the line except our own salaries. There is a proposition before the present Congress to increase the salaries of our ministers to foreign countries, or of those of them who are receiving the same salaries that we propose to give ourselves, to $10,000. Why, Mr. President, there are some private secretaries receiving almost as large salaries as Members of the two Houses of Congress are, and that will be found by an examination of the bill that is now under consideration. The heads of various bill that is now under consideration. The heads of various bureaus of the Government get more than Senators are re-The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission get twice as much. So do certain judges, and their pay continues during life, whether they are on the bench or not.

I will not call attention to the salaries that are being paid in connection with the building of the Panama Canal, because they are rather startling in some instances.

Mr. President, there is one feature of this matter that I think it is well to say a word about, and that is that the expenses members of the two Houses of Congress must necessarily meet are not to be measured by hotel bills, or by the cost of travel, or by any of the ordinary expenses of life. There are political expenditures that we can not escape. It would be of interest, I think, to some people outside who are criticising this proposed legislation if they could examine the check books of some Senators and see what expenditures they have been called upon to meet and which they could not refuse.

The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the judges on the bench, those who represent us in foreign countries are not required to make political contributions, but there is not a Senator or a Representative in Congress who has not to do so at every election, and it is right that he should do it, but it takes a very considerable amount out of the small salary he re-

I think I am stating the exact truth when I say that there are on my desk now three calls for money that I can not refuse to give—small in amount in each case, but nevertheless a burden. The delegation" are always the ones who are called upon first to contribute to all sorts of things in their States, and they have, as a matter of fact, to treat those calls with the consideration that a man who owes his position to his fellow-men must of necessity do. The proposed increase, as I said, Mr. President, is an act of simple justice to ourselves, and we ought not to further discriminate against ourselves.

It is said by some that we can resign. Of course we could. Mr. President, I venture to say that if every official of this Government from the President down should resign to-day the places could be filled by men who would not exact one dollar in the matter of salary. I think I am not mistaken in saying that every place in this body can be filled by men without salaries. The Presidency itself can be filled by men who would not count the salary a matter worth considering for a moment. But that is not any argument why when men are called to high official positions they should not be adequately paid for their services

Mr. President, I talked more than once with the late Senator Hoar concerning this matter. He was very insistent upon securing what, I think, was a proper increase in the salaries of the judges, and he gave a great deal of time to that matter and succeeded in getting the salaries of the judges increased. He said to me not long before his death that he intended to offer a bill in the Senate increasing the salaries of the members of the two Houses of Congress, and it is interesting to refer to his Autobiography of Seventy Years, where, in volume II, page 267, is found the following:

The satary of Senators and Representatives is shamefully small. This is a great injustice, not only to members of the two Houses, but it is a great public injury, because the country can not command the service of able men in the prime of life unless they have already acquired large fortunes. It can not be expected that a lawyer making from $25,600 to $50,000 a year, or a man engaged in business whose annual income perhaps far exceeds that amount, will leave it for $5,000 a year. In that way he is compelled not only to live frugally himself, but, what is more disagreeable still, to subject his household to live in the humblest style in a costly and fashionable city into which wealthy persons are coming from all parts of the country.

The Members of Congress have a great many demands upon them which they can not resist.

The English aristocracy understands this pretty well. They give no salary at all to the members of their House of Commons. The result is that the poor people, the working people, and people in ordinary life can not get persons to represent them from their own class. That will soon be true in this country, if we do not make a change. I suppose nearly every member of either House of Congress will tell you in private that he thinks the salary ought to be raised.

Mr. President, those were the views of a great Senator who served his country long and who left this body a much poorer man than he was when he entered it. I think the words on this subject of Senator Hoar, whom we all loved and whose memory we all revere, ought to have great weight with us in determining our votes on this question.

I do not think there is any argument whatever in the statistics of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] showing that those who represent other countries are getting even less salary than we are getting at the present time. The conditions are all different; the circumstances are all different, just as they are different in every other department of life; and it seems to me that the only thing we ought to look at in this connection is the question whether or not our experience has taught us that we ought to have a salary adequate to enable us to meet the obligations of life in this great city, where everything is ex-ceedingly expensive, and where we ought as Senators of the United States to be put in a position where we can at least do the decent thing toward our families and toward those who have a right to exact from us some consideration when they come to the great capital of the nation.

trust that all amendments to the House amendment will be voted down, and that the Senate will agree to the motion made by the Senator from Illinois to concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire merely to say a few words, as I am obliged to go to a conference committee; but I do wish to say something on this subject, because it is one which I have had much at heart for a good many years, from my observation of the extreme inadequacy of the present salary in very many cases, and in both branches of Congress.

In England, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] pointed out, they do not pay their members of the House of Commons at all. It is the tradition—

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is usually so accurate that I dislike to question his statement, but unless I am very much mistaken, since the last election and the entry into Parliament of a very large number of representatives of labor unions or what are known as the "working classes," I recall having seen in some paper a statement that Parliament has passed a law giving salaries for the first time in the history of their Parliament. I may be mistaken. It may have been merely introduced and not passed.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, I am certain, is mistaken. No such act has passed.

The English system came down from the time when the House of Commons was made up almost exclusively of landowners, men of considerable income. In later times poor men have entered the House of Commons, notably among the Irish members, and many of the Irish members in the House have been paid by contributions from their own countrymen and from their sympathizers in this country. Now, they have a large number of labor members, and those men are at this moment paid, unless I am greatly misinformed, by contributions of their labor unions. That seems to me the worst possible system, and it is bound to come in any representative government where there is a large democratic representation, because otherwise poor men can not serve in the representative bodies, and I think we shall find that England will perceive under present conditions the mistake that has been made and will come to the system of paying.

We have always paid in common with all the other representative bodies, and it seems to me perfectly plain that what we want to do and what we should aim at doing is to pay to Senators and Representatives a salary which will enable them to live becomingly, in accordance with the great position of trust which they hold, which may relieve them, if they desire to be relieved, of the effort to make money in other ways.

Mr. President, we have not raised the salaries for forty years. The salary was fixed at $5,000 in 1866, and except for a brief interregnum of the bill of 1873 it has not been raised. It is perfectly clear, I think, that to the great body of Representa-tives and Senators $5,000 is a wholly inadequate salary. There may be a few here and there to whom it is entirely sufficient. To undertake to pay men for Government service what they could earn outside, at the bar or in business, would of course be an absurdity and no one would suggest it for a moment. But it is proper, and it is not only proper but merely decent, to my mind that Senators and Representatives should have a salary which would enable them to live here as they ought to live, and not feel as my colleague, Mr. Hoar, felt at the close of his life, when he had come to be an old man, the continual pressure of a narrowness. He gave his entire life to the service of the country. He laid aside a great practice at the bar in order to continue in that service. I never knew a man who cared less about money than he did, and yet I know that in his latter years it was a continual pressure, living even as simply as he did in this city, to get along with the salary that was allowed.

The scale of living has advanced greatly since 1866. V pay more to our Representatives and Senators than is paid abroad, because the whole scale of wages in this country is much higher and it is more expensive to live in this country. I hope that the amendments will be voted down, and that the Senate will concur with the House. The American people are a generous people. They have no desire that men whom they consider fit to represent them should scramble along as best they may with a pittance in Washington. I am certain they desire them to be justly and properly paid, and I think, Mr. President, that it is for the dignity and the decency of official life here to pay a salary proportionate to the importance of the office which is held by Senators and Representatives, and which will enable them to live not extravagantly, but simply and decently with their families in a manner becoming to their situation.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the situation in which the Senate finds itself this morning, if I knew the yeas and nays on these questions would be ordered, I should perhaps say nothing. As it is uncertain, however, whether such a vote will be ordered by the Senate, I simply desire to say, without stating reasons or elaborating those reasons, that I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and am opposed to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I rise simply for the same pur-

If a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken, I shall vote against the entire amendment of the House of Representatives. not think I have a right to come here upon a salary of $5,000 and then vote to raise that salary. I am opposed to it upon principle and on policy.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, this is a very important question, and more important to the country, in my judgment, than it is to the individual Senators. I hold to the opinion, which has guided me during almost twenty years of life here, that a Senator ought not to be engaged in any business which can be affected by his vote, and if he finds himself confronted here with a proposition in the determination of which he is pecuniarily interested, if his private business is such that it will be affected by his vote on that proposition, I think he ought to withhold his vote.

The country is entitled to the best service we can give it and to our undivided attention. I do not agree with the Sena-tor from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] that the vacation belongs to Senators and during those vacations they can engage in some other business in order to make additional money.

Will the Senator from Idaho permit me? Mr. BERRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly. Mr. BERRY. I said that, at any rate, they did engage in other business during the vacation, and I say again that they will equally do so if the salary is raised. It would not prevent them from doing so.

Mr. DUBOIS. There is not a time during the year when a Senator ought not to think of the public business. There are 90 men here to legislate for 80,000,000 people. They are selected men. They are picked men. But it has now come to the pass where every Senator is forced to make money outside of the salary which he receives unless he has an income from some other source.

There are, I am sorry to say, not a great many left who belong to the class of Senator Hoar who go into public life early and devote their undivided attention to public questions and not to the amassing of a fortune. I think our legislation ought to be in the line of getting that class of men when young into the public service and keeping them there. Every Senator here knows that you can not properly live on the present salary. There is not a Senator here who is married and has a family whose family has not occupied in his community a good social status. They have been the leaders at home almost in every instance in all social matters. By that I mean that the wife has interested herself in charitable and worthy things at home. She has helped to upbuild, the same as the husband has, and it is not fair that when she comes here she shall be excluded entirely through lack of funds. She must accept social atten-She must discharge the obligations which are imposed upon her by the office which her husband occupies.

A young man now properly hesitates, if he is engaged in a business which is bringing him several thousand dollars a year, in the law, or any other, to accept this high position, knowing that his business will be dissipated and that at the end of his service he will be left without anything, either money or busi-I think the twenty-five hundred dollars additional would enable a Senator to live comfortably and also to keep up his social obligations in a creditable way. I am talking now of poor Senators. I know, of course, that the salary is nothing to a great many, but I do not want it to come to pass that no one can aspire to a seat here or enter upon a public career which will be permanent unless he has money. The tendency is too strongly in that direction. We should employ all proper means to check it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I interrupt the Senator from Idaho simply for the purpose of stating what I meant to state when I occupied the floor before, and that is that the proposed increase to members of the two Houses of Congress will impose a per capita burden upon the people of this country of just 1 cent and 4 mills. If we make this increase, each person in the United States will be taxed 1 cent and 4 mills more than each person is taxed at present.

Mr. RAYNER. How much is the whole annual amount-the whole annual increase?

Mr. GALLINGER. About $1,000,000.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not think the people will figure this out in dollars and cents. If I read the signs of the times correctly and accurately measure the trend of events, the people want good service, undivided service, and honest service. not want to force their Representatives to go on the lecture platform, to write magazine articles, or to look around here and there for a business opening to eke out the salaries which they receive here. They want them to devote their attention to the interests of the people, with a mind free, so that they will not belong to this class or to the other and can legislate equally for all of them.

I think the $2,500 a year will make a tremendous difference to Senators. They can not live on $5,000 a year, because they must maintain two homes. They must contribute, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] says, to campaign expenses. Their friends come here. Our western people appreciate that more than those who live close by. Good friends, close friends, call on us. The least we can do is to ask them to take luncheon with us or to take them to the theater, and every time a little church is to be built we are called upon for a small contribution. There are innumerable things which confront us in the way of demands for money, owing solely to the position we occupy, and the additional $2,500 would not only enable us to meet those as we should meet them and to meet our social obligations as we should meet them, but it would also enable that class of Senators to carry a fair life insurance.

In my opinion, it is of more interest to the people of the country than it is to individual Senators and Members that this bill should pass as reported by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, for the same reason that actuated the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] to state how they proposed to vote upon this amendment, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments.

Mr. President, this is an exceptional piece of legislation. It affects every Senator very intimately and affects him in a pecuniary way. I do not propose to set up my judgment in a matter of that kind against the judgment of my colleagues in this body, but I think, nevertheless, that by reason of the peculiar character of the question it is one which can be judged of only by ourselves individually, each one for himself.

I will say that I am inclined to think that under existing conditions in this country the present salary of Senators and Representatives is insufficient for the majority of those gentlemen. I will go further and say that were I to vote for the pending amendment, I do not believe any considerable number of my constituents would find fault with me for so doing. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I feel under obligations to myself, without reference to anybody else or to my constituents, to vote against the amendment.

It occurs to me that we are here in a position somewhat analogous to that of a trustee. The people of the United States have confided to Congress the power to invade the Treasury and to appropriate the money therein for any purpose that in the judgment of Congress is desirable or proper. There is in that position a sacredness and a sanctity that in my judgment should never be overlooked and never be abused. In passing such a measure as this we will establish a precedent. The trustee who takes the funds of the cestui que trust and applies it to the payment of his own services is reprobated whenever it is attempted.

Mr. President, as briefly as possible, because I am aware that no one wants to hear a lengthy discussion of this matter, I will say that I believe the difficulty which presents itself to my mind can be obviated by an amendment I propose to offer. That amendment simply makes the proposed law take effect That amendment simply makes the proposed law take effect after the expiration of the term of every Senator who votes on the passage of the amendment. If my amendment to the amendment is adopted, I shall vote for it. My amendment I will read for the benefit of the Senate. It is as follows: Strike out the words "nineteen hundred and seven" and insert "nineteen hundred and thirteen" in lieu thereof. If it is adopted I shall be very glad to vote for the amendment as amended.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, merely a word. conceive that the Senate will so demean itself as to refuse to give anybody who wants the yeas and nays an opportunity to show just how he stands. I have just been reelected to this body. If I live I shall stay here six more years. I shall vote for an increase of the salary because I think it is right, not because I will get more money by it. I would have much preferred to have voted for it last year before my election for a third term, without opposition, so that those of my constituents who might object could have had a chance to determine whether or not they would continue me here. If we are ever to have an increase, men must vote here sometime affecting themselves, because the Senate being a continuous body we could never have any increase at all unless some Senators shall vote to increase their own salaries.

The proposition of the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory] to have this take effect six years hence is ludicrous, because no one expects it can get many votes but his. Possibly others may agree with him, but I do not see it in that light. I believe that the people are much more concerned

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.
Mr. MALLORY. I intended no humor at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was not speaking of humor. could not by any possibility be supposed to indulge in humor.

I was just saying I believe the people are very much more concerned about the character of the work we do here and the genuineness of the representation of the people, the honesty and loyalty of their Senators, than in any other quality of a Senator or about a proper and just increase of pay. There is great complaint that this body represents corporations and wealth and does not represent the people. If that be true, more's the pity.

It is not a question of the million dollars which this increase will take from the Treasury. It is a question whether we shall have men here who will fritter away hundreds of millions on favored interests, on special classes, on this job or that, rather than to subserve the public welfare by trying to watch the Treasury and do that which is just. I did not consider the question of salary when I asked to be sent here. My constituents are not considering it now. They want the best service, and I have tried to give it to them.

So far as the responsibility for this lies, I am prepared to take it, and if any considerable number of my constituents find any fault I am ready to resign and let the people pass upon the question.

Mr. DANIEL. The Constitution of the United States, Mr. President, has confided to one body, the Congress of the United States, the obligation and duty of fixing its own salary. In doing so the people contemplated and have a right to require that every man shall deliver his honest judgment, whether he puts himself in a disagreeable position or no. I am well aware that most of us have an interest in the question of salary. The people knew that when they sent us here, and they knew it was one that we could neither avoid, dodge, nor confer upon anyone else.

It is exceedingly painful to a man of delicate sensibilities to take part in a matter in which he inevitably is interested. That should not constrain his mind, but he should remember that he is but one of many who are in a similar case, and he should act according to his own judgment and responsibility and do exactly what he thinks right, whatever its consequence.

There are 90 Senators and 386 Representatives. give our judgment as to all of these public servants and say what is right for them, and self should not sway the scale either to make anyone of them increase the salary or shrink from voting as he thinks. We can not be higher than the That has made us the judges. We can not, if Constitution. we would, rise higher than the Constitution. Accepting its truth, we should exercise it without suspicion of ourselves and fearless of those who may take counsel of suspicion.

It is my conviction that the interests of this country require that it should enlarge the salaries of its Senators and Representatives; and so thinking and believing, I wish to stand and be counted on that side.

So far as the House of Representatives is concerned, there is one thing that we should remember. Of all the hundred thousands of officeholders and appointees whom we have in this country the House of Representatives is the sole body of public servants who are chosen by the people. They are the people's immediate representatives. While for years and years they have swollen the salaries of judicial and executive officers they have kept themselves down at so low a rate that they can not with such a salary support their families in the appropriate way in this city and conduct themselves in the most efficient way to serve the people without the strictest economy nor often without a certain niggardliness that is foreign to their duty, disposition, and spirit.

I believe it is in the interest of popular government that those intimate and immediate servants whom the people have sent here to represent them amid an environment which may be tempting to the weak and which is a burden to the strong should have the tools of their trade to work with in a workmanlike way.

Only thus can they fulfill their office.

In a great body there will be diversified classes of men, but we must suppose every member to be worthy of his place. There is no man who is intellectually, morally, and in education and ability worthy of his place in the Congress who could not, in my humble judgment, with a due disposition of his talents, support himself more comfortably with a less salary at home or realize more if he bestowed upon his private business the talents which he bestows upon the public service. At least such is the rule. But there are some men eminently qualified for duty who have not money sense. They may be scholars profoundly versed; they may possess great knowledge of law and of men and things, but they may know not common necessities nor possess the faculty that takes in the mechanics of money. Daniel Webster was of their kind, and both Clay and Calhoun were of a sort of kindred spirit. Such men may make great Senators and great Representatives, and have done so.

All should be paid a reasonable amount, not in extravagance, not in penuriousness, not in excess, and not in meanness, but the old common-law valuation, the sum that a good and intelligent man is reasonably worth.

It is the interest of the masses of the people that those poor in fortune but sound in character and of patriotic and able mold should come to Congress. They can not do it without sacrifice as matters now stand, nor can they do it without stinting the means of accomplishment and having anxious minds as to their present situation. Sacrifice is right when needful, but government should not organize sacrifice.

As to the Senate, it is a body which in some respects has larger burdens than the House. It represents the States as well as the people. Each Senator has on an average nearly 1,000,000 constituents. The Senate is both an executive body and a judicial one, and sometimes when the House adjourns to its home the Senate is retained here to consider the most difficult and perplexing questions that concern the nation and the fortunes of the people not only of this country, but of the whole world in their correlation with us.

lives in an atmosphere of public criticism. But, Mr. President, there is scarcely a Senator here who does not know the fact that men accustomed to the plain respectabilities of life-I do not speak of those who belong to fashion and seek its association, but the men of the great middle class who are accustomed to the refinements of life-can not keep their families in the city of Washington and support themselves out of the present salary. The incidentals of their association are those of constant expenditure, and this salary, $5,000 or $7,500—and indeed if you should increase it to $10,000 or $12,000—would not enable them to go into the social whirl with the diplomat and the gentleman of money. They are not "in it" now and could not be "in it" if the salary were multiplied by three or four.

It is not for "society," in the sense that the word is used by those who have the means and the taste to indulge in entertaining and in the luxuries that mark the lives of the rich in great cities, that salaries should be raised, but for those who efficiency in their places and would not be lacking in the hospitable nature that their people have at home, and which should not be denied by their representatives.

No place in the society of fashion can come in the purview of a $5,000 salary, nor in the $7,500 which it is proposed to give the Senators and Representatives. The man who strikes an even balance here with either sum would be a man worthy to be promoted as a financier to become the Secretary of the Treasury. The English House of Commons, as has been pointed out, gets no What is the result? Less than a majority is a quorum. Half the members are seldom in the Parliament hall. Absenteeism is the rule. Many are supported by outside interests which they are sent there to serve. This should never be; but it surely will be when the representatives of a people are not reasonably paid. We want men here in Congress who serve the people only, and who serve them efficiently; and in return they should receive a fair compensation. We do not want Senators and Representatives who are supported by "the interests."

The executive department or its higher officials have greater salaries now than Senators and Representatives. The judicial department has larger salaries; and, more than that, those who fill them are taken off the billet with salaries in retirement.

Senators and Representatives do not seek, ask, or desire that they be taken care of when their days are up and weakness But they have a right to take common care of themselves while serving the people whom they are to serve and whom they are in honor and duty bound to serve faithfully. What are they afraid of? The people? No. The people have intelligence and honor, and do not fear the honest opinion of those who are of them and for them.

I believe this is all that I have to say, Mr. President, except to commend the speeches which have been already made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois], and the Senator from South Carolina

[Mr. TILLMAN]

There is nothing to be said that could disparage the addresses which have been made upon the other side. There is no man in this body who has a higher respect for the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] or the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] than I. I know the work of those men, and that it is a solid and substantial work. I know the sensibilities which must actuate them on this occasion. While I share those sensibilities, and while I dislike exceedingly to be placed in a position by my public office in which I must pass upon such a question as is now presented, I must meet it in the spirit of justice to all concerned and deliver my judgment honestly and squarely according to the facts. This I have now done. On my honor as a Senator and a man I believe the salaries of Senators and Representatives should be increased that they may the better exercise their office. Accordingly I shall so vote without suspicion of myself, and not questioning the intelligent public opinion which ought to, and will, pass upon the matter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress the power to increase the salaries of Members. It is not lodged anywhere else. The proposition is now made to increase the salaries. If I vote for it, I vote to increase my own salary from the 4th of March next until the 4th of March, 1909, when I shall go out of public life. Am I justified in refusing to vote, if I think that ought to be done, because some person will criticise me, because some people will say that the Senator from Colorado voted because he wanted that $2,500 additional? Mr. President, I shall vote for this proposition upon the theory that it is right. In my twenty-seven years or more of service in this body I have never been frightened away from a vote that I believed it was my duty to cast.

Senators say that they are sensitive about increasing their We will be criticised whatsoever we do, for every public man own salary. Mr. President, I am not sensitive in the exercise of any constitutional duty put upon me. I do not intend to go into any discussion, however. On two or three occasions before, when I had an opportunity, I voted to increase the salaries. I do not claim that I would not stay here if the salary is not increased. I suppose if when I came here in 1876 the salary had been $3,000 a year I would still have been here. It has not been a question with me of salary, but it is a question with some Senators as to salary.

I do not know for certain whether we are to have a roll call. but I want to have it distinctly understood that I regard my-gelf as discharging a duty imposed upon me by the Constitution, and I would not flinch from it if the world was to criticise me in the severest possible degree. I do not believe it will, but if it did it would make no difference in my vote.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, this is my thirty-second winter In the city of Washington. I have known almost all the men in both Houses of Congress. I do not know any of my personal acquaintances who has ever served any length of time in either House who went out of it with as much money as he went in. My distinguished and dear friend from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] has been here twenty-two years. He voiced a while ago the honest sentiment he entertained and expressed years ago, when everybody thought he was here for life, and yet I venture to say that that gentleman goes away to-day with not one-tenth of the property he had when he came here, and under such circumstances he goes away at his time of life to battle with the world for a living. I am to serve here for four years more from the 4th of next March, and, as far as I can get any assurance from the public, I would have no opposition if I chose to come back. I do not choose to come back.

But, Mr. President, in deciding this question for myself, as each man must (and I am not authorized to criticise any man for his feeling about it or his vote), I want to be put on record, and I want to vote. I shall vote for this proposition because I think it is right. I do not think, speaking for myself, cover four hundred and eighty-odd other gentlemen whose salaries I am voting on. I can not believe that I am "it." I am only a very small part of "it"—one four-hundred-and-eightieth of "it." that I have a right to hold myself so close to my eye that I

I know, Mr. President, that this is the most poorly paid body of servants in the employment of the Government. not a country on the face of the globe that pays its inferior and subordinate officers so high and its higher officers so low as does the United States of America. A lieutenant in the German army gets $240 a year, and he can not marry without the consent of the colonel, and he must prove that he is able to take care of his wife and children or he can not marry at all. A telegrapher in Russia who goes to the smallest post must be able to telegraph in Russian, German, English, and French, and his stipend is $100 a year. An English postmaster does not get $5,000 a year for keeping a post-office, but $1,000 is paid in So with all the inferior grades. I want to say that England. I do not believe the inferior grades of the service, I mean the lower, are paid enough here.

I do not see myself that there is the slightest delicacy in a man voting for the increased pay of all the Members of Congress because he perchance as one of them will receive an addition to his pay. The only question is this, and in my opinion it is the only one that should be considered: Is it right? Is $5,000 a just and reasonable compensation, or is $7,500 a more just and reasonable compensation? If any Senator here does not believe that he ought to have $7,500, then he should vote for $5,000. If any Senator here believes that the work calls for $7,500, then he is at perfect liberty, in my opinion, to vote for that amount, because he believes it is right and not because his interest is affected by it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I understand the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERINGE] desires to proceed with his speech upon the conclusion of the matter now pending, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it has been truly remarked here that a great many men sit in this Chamber whose income makes this salary a mere bagatelle. I have myself personally known two Senators who at the end of each month handed over his check for $416 to his private clerk. Others here will vote for this measure to whom it is nothing whatever, to whom there is not as much in one year's pay as a day's pay is to me, but they will vote for this bill because they do not believe the present salary is sufficient for the work done and the character of men to be employed.

With all deference to the rich men by whom I am surrounded, I want to say the interests of the men of this country are in the main in the keeping of men who have to toil with their hands or brains for a living for themselves and their families. It is true, exactly as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Berry] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] have stated, that men would come here at a salary of two or three thousand dollars a year, and yet we must acknowledge that the compensation must justify the great class, for the talent of the country must be brought here for the administration of the public affairs of a great nation. This is a nation of 85,000,000 people; there are $74,000,000,000 of property here; and these vast interests are put into the hands of this Senate at the last. It must pass upon every measure that comes before it, and this Chamber must work with a free hand.

Mr. President, I am perhaps the poorest man in the Senate. do not feel ashamed of that. If I sat here a thousand years do not suppose I would be worth a cent more than I am to-day. I would not try to be and I would not want to be. But I recollect a conversation with General Butler, when he was a Member

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly. Excuse me; I did not see the Sen-

Mr. CARMACK. I do not want the statement of the Senator that he is the poorest man in this body to pass unchallenged. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONEY. I did not see the Senator when I made the re-I except the Senator from Tennessee. He is just as poor as he deserves to be.

But I was about to recall that I had a conversation with Gen-ral Butler in the Forty-fifth Congress. I said: "I must say eral Butler in the Forty-fifth Congress. that I am surprised at the readiness with which you meet every question that comes up, and how well prepared you are on every-thing." He said: "It is no secret particularly. I have got four extremely intelligent young men to whom I pay handsome salaries. I send those young men to ransack the libraries upon every question on the calendar in which I take an interest. They make a precis of facts; they have references to volumes, citations, and so on. They come to me with the matter already There is very little labor for me to master these prepared. things when they are prepared for me in that way." many of those here can afford to do anything of that sort? They must dig it out themselves. It is quite true, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, that the Senate in a moment, not of liberality to themselves particularly, but for the benefit of the country that its work may be properly performed, gave an allowance that goes, not to the Senator, but to his clerk and to his messenger. That messenger is what? Generally a stenographer or a man who reads books for him or something of that sort. I want to say that this assistance is not only well deserved on the part of a member, but it is the best investment of money the United States has ever made. The people of the United States are deriving more benefit from the assistance supplied by the clerks and secretaries than the Senators and Representatives themselves are receiving from them.

If I had a great business that required so many servants and men of such character, if I had an expenditure of $750,000,000 per year, as the United States Government has, I do not think that I would get men to manage my affairs who would serve me for $5,000 a year. What corporation in this country does not give its chief counsel from twenty-five to fifty to one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year? There need be no delicacy about this matter. The only thing is to act with conscientiousness. If it could be fixed to have a sliding scale of salaries so that a man who thought he was worth $5,000 could go up and draw that much and a man who thought he was worth $7,500 could draw that much, I suppose everybody was worth $1,000 could thaw that index, I suppose everybody would be willing to vote for this proposition; but we can not have a thing of that sort, Mr. President.

I for one have never felt in my life that I have been sufficiently paid for anything that I have done. Montesquieu made a remark in his Spirit of Laws that in a monarchy no gentleman ever felt that he was honored or dignified by any position the king could give him; he was always equal to it. So I do not believe there is a man in this Chamber to-day who is not worth $7,500 a year.

As I said, I will vote for this proposition to go into effect on the 4th of March next or on the 4th of any other March, although that is not the custom in raising salaries here. Congress has raised the salaries six different times, and in every single instance they were not in the future, but all retroactive. One was for two years, one was for four months and sixteen days, one was for six months, one was for six days, another one reduced the salaries, and that, too, was retroactive. The only trouble about that was, how in the deuce did they get back the money from the men who had drawn it? But that is the history of the change in salaries. So the salaries have been put up and put back and put up again repeatedly, and no solitary act has ever been anything except retroactive.

Now, that is not an argument in favor of retroaction, for I do not believe in it. I do not see how Congress did it; but not knowing the circumstances that environed those Congresses, respectively, I can not criticise them much. But I know this will take effect with another Congress, and that this Senate will turn out not one-third of its Members in number, but it will have nominally one-third of new membership every two years. So you would never find a time when Congress could vote this increase of salary, because they will be coming in and getting the benefit of it. But if you put it four years ahead, as proposed by the Senator from Florida, then you must calculate that the Representatives will not be there. There will not be one-third of those Representatives there in four years from today, and that one-third think they are entitled to vote for their successors in office.

Mr. President, for my part I want to have a roll call on this question; and I want to go on the roll as in favor of an increase of salary for those who are to come after me; and for myself I shall accept it, if the law is passed, and it will come to me without the slightest squeamishness, or I would rather say, perhaps, delicacy upon my part about it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the amendment that I intend to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add the following proviso: Provided. That as to the Vice-President of the United States and Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, the compensation above provided for shall not apply for the term or terms for which either has already been elected or shall be elected in the year 1907, but it shall apply after the expiration of such terms.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I suppose as long as one is a member of this body his votes should be cast conscien-If I were to follow my impulse I would stand side by side with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubois], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and the others who advocated the amendment as it comes from the House.

I am not opposed to the increase of salaries for Senators and Members, but the view I take of the proposition is that there is not a Senator or Member who has not sought the position he now occupies and who was not elected or appointed to that position with the express or implied understanding that he would serve for the term for which he was elected at the compensation fixed by law. I take it that, with that compensation upon the statute books, every official mentioned in the proviso I have had read sought the place, and sought it earnestly, except, as a matter of course, the presiding officer of this body, whom I would not class in the category of office seekers under any circumstances. But it seems to me that there is not a Senator or Member who is not occupying his place with an implied contract with his constituency that he will serve out his term at the salary upon the statute books at the time he was

There has not been a Senator elected this winter, there was not a Representative elected in the month of November, there will not be a Senator elected during the year 1907, and there are but two or three, I understand, yet to be elected, who will not be in the office or who will not be seeking the office with an implied promise to his constituency that he does not seek or desire and will not vote to increase his salary.

It is true, Mr. President, that when the law will go into effect (for doubtless it will be passed by a decided majority of this body) I will not be one of the beneficiaries. If I was I would vote and speak against it the more earnestly. But I do not feel that I have any greater right to vote to increase the salary of those who I believe or hold to have an implied agreement with the country to serve for a specified time at a specified sum than -I have to increase my own salary. I do not disagree with those who maintain that the present salary is not sufficient to afford to those who receive it such a comfortable living as gentlemen of the character who occupy these positions are entitled to have. I do not believe that there is a Senator or Member in the present Congress who has not come here at a considerable financial sacrifice. If he is a lawyer, he must sacrifice many professional fees. If he is a business man, he can find no one who will give the same attention to his business as he is able to give to it himself. If he is at the head of a manufacturing establishment or a great commercial body, he must necessarily sacrifice during at least a year of each Congress interests of vast importance to him and that no one else can serve as he did and could.

But, Mr. President, these positions were sought with a knowlege of these facts. The honor and the dignity of a position edge of these facts. in either House, I have no doubt, they felt were ample consideration for the sacrifices they would make in taking positions in either the one or the other body. Under those circumstances. Mr. President, it seems to me, however others may feel-and I make no issue with those who feel or speak to the contraryit seems to me that the obligation, the implied agreement, between the candidates and their constituencies when selection was made should not be broken for the sake of the comparatively small increase of salary that this amendment will bring. I say comparatively small increase of salary, for I do not believe that the $2,500 per annum would deter a single Representative or a single Senator from seeking to acquire the position in the first place or to maintain it after it has been acquired.

Nor do I believe, Mr. President, that the failure to adopt the amendment that comes here from the House of Representatives would deter any Senator or Member of the other House from seeking to retain the position which he now has. It is in reality a small matter to this great Government. The matter of a million dollars for two, three, four, or five years will not be felt in the billion dollars that is now annually appropriated for carrying on the affairs of the Government. It is not the sum that is involved, Mr. President, that I flinch at; it is a mere bagatelle; but why I hesitate to vote for the amendment is because I believe there is an implied agreement that should not be ignored and which I do not feel at liberty to ignore.

This question was up, I think, about four years ago. It was then claimed by some of my constituents that the vote I gave prevented the adoption of such an amendment as this, a provision that increased the salaries of Senators and Representatives to the sum of $7,500 a year. The reason that vote was given is the reason which impels me to offer the amendment There was no opportunity to cast a vote which I have read. at that time directly upon that proposition; but the motive that impelled me to cast the vote was that I did not feel that I had a right to vote to raise my own salary or to raise the salary of any other Senator or Member of the House of Representatives. Then, as now, I was entirely willing that an amendment should be adopted, or a law passed, that would increase the salaries of Senators and Members of the other House, as new Senators and new Members would be elected after the law had gone into

I regret, Mr. President, that I am unable to vote for the amendment which comes from the other House. It will give me great pleasure to vote for the amendment if it shall be amended either as is proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Mallory] or as it is proposed to be amended by the amendment which I shall offer, for $7,500 is not too much, although $5,000 is quite ample, in view of the honor and dignity of the position which the amendment affects, to bring to these bodies the very best talent of the country and men of the highest character and most admirable ambition.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I have desisted from saving anything on the pending proposition, and I shall not say anything upon it during the discussion. It had been announced that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] would make a speech to-day, and I supposed when we began the discussion and consideration of the bill that it would probably be ended inside of an hour or two. I am very anxious that we shall come to a vote on the bill as soon as possible, so that the Senator from Indiana may take the floor.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to occupy more than a moment of the Senate's time, even if I were not restrained because of the fact that the Senator from Indiana Mr. Beveringe] desires to speak, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] has just stated.

Mr. President, it does not lie in my mouth to criticise the word or act of any other Senator, and I do not intend to do so by what I am about to say. This is a question that every man must determine for himself from his own point of view. I believe the salary now provided for Senators and Representatives is inadequate; but I can not, from my point of view, vote to increase the salary during the term for which I have been elected. If an amendment could be adopted that would put the operation of the law increasing salaries beyond the terms of Senators and Representatives now elected, I should support it, but not otherwise. As the matter now stands, I shall feel myself constrained to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and if that be not agreed to, then to vote against the entire proposition.

I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. He admits that the present pay of Senators and Representatives is inadequate, but declines to be in a position where he votes to raise his own pay. It seems to me that it is within the power of every Senator to be perfectly at ease with his own conscience and with his constituents, for if the salary is increased and he declines to vote for such increase, and he prefers to receive for himself the same salary as now—the same salary as when he was elected—he can refuse to draw the increase and can make the people understand his position in that way. It seems to me that would be a perfectly safe way out of the matter, as it is a matter between a Senator and his constituency and between a Senator and his own individual con-

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, what I might do or some other Senator might do in such a contingency is not important. does not affect the question of right or propriety involved in the pending proposition. That is all I care to say, Mr. Presi-

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I did not expect to participate in this debate on the salary question; but as it seems probable, from the many advocates of the pending amendment of the House of Representatives, that there may not be a call of the yeas and nays, I think it is proper and just to myself to say that I am not in favor of increasing the salaries of Sena-tors and Representatives. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and if that is not adopted I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the House of Representatives increasing the salaries of Senators and Representatives to $7,500 per annum. I am in favor of allowing the salaries of Senators and Representatives to remain as now fixed by law, at $5,000 per annum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NELSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. MALLORY. I should like to have the amendment of the House of Representatives read as it would read if the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the House of Representatives as it would stand if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota be adopted.

The Secretary. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the House of Representatives, after the word "each," by striking out the words:

and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each.

So that, if amended, it will read:

That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and the heads of Executive Departments who are members of the President's Cabinet, shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to say anything at this time upon the main proposition, but as to this amendment I want to say a word.

However I may vote on the main proposition I am certainly opposed to this amendment. As I have previously stated on the floor of the Senate, so long as the standard of compensation of Senators and Representatives remains as it is, I will recognize that as the correct interpretation on the part of Congress of what should be the standard of compensation and I will never vote for the increase of the salary of any other officer of the Government. The only exception I make to that is the case of the Vice-President.

I think the compensation of the Vice-President is disgrace-fully low. I thing the compensation of the Vice-President should be at least $25,000 a year. I have served in the Senate during the Administrations of three different Presidents and of four different Vice-Presidents, and my deliberate judgment, from such observation as I have been able to make, is that the expenses of the Vice-President are larger than the expenses of the President of the United States. I think the Vice-President expends more money by reason of his office—and I am not speaking of this particular Vice-President, but of the four under whom I have served—the Vice-President expends more money by reason of his official position than does the President of the United States. It is very natural that such should be the case, because of his more intimate and wider association with official life than the President of the United States has, except in a very long-distance manner.

So I make that exception, and I would be very glad to vote for that; but as to saying that, while we recognize $5,000 as a correct compensation for a Senator and a Representative, the head of a Department should have $12,000 is ridiculous to my mind, and I would never vote for it under any circumstances. do not say this in regard to the merits or the demerits of the main proposition, but I want the reason stated why I shall most certainly vote against the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota. I think everybody else should properly vote the same way

Mr. President, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] about the inadequacy of the compensation of the Vice-President of the United States, I desire to say that the amendment I offered was based upon the proposition that the salary of no official who is elected for a specific term should be raised during that term. In many of the States of the Union there are constitutional provisions against the increase of compensation to any official during his term of office. It is so in my State, and I regard that constitutional inhibition as a wise and a proper one. If it were a proposition to increase the salary of the Vice-President to $20,000 or $25,000 a year, pure and simple, to make that the compensation for that high official, I would vote to do so with the greatest cheerfulness, provided I could do so without infringing the principle upon which my amendment is based. Under the circumstances, or, at least, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia, I thought it was due that I should say

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], on which the yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary. In the amendment of the House of Representatives it is proposed to strike out the following words:

and the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, and the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum each.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not understand that that was the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WARREN. As the amendment was read it sounded as if the salaries were fixed at $7,500. Surely that is not the purpose of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Minnesota moves to strike that out.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I understand from his colleague [Mr. Daniel] that I have a I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when Mr. Martin's name was called). I desire to say that if my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gamble]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin], and vote. I vote "nay."

So Mr. Nelson's amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives was rejected.

Mr MALLORY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. In the amendment of the House of Representatives it is proposed to strike out the words "nineteen hundred and seven" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nineteen, hundred and thirteen;" so that, if amended, it will read:

That on and after March 4, 1913, the compensation shall be, etc. Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I think the amendment of the House of Representatives is right, and, in order to illustrate it, will take the privilege of speaking of my colleague [Mr. MORGAN].

He began his education at the old field school. He has always been a student from boyhood. I knew him when he first became a lawyer, and I have known him ever since. I have lived in the same village with him for about sixty years.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Alabama commenced life without anything. You have all seen how hard he works here. He has worked that way all his life. I have been his associate and adversary for over sixty years. He has always been a hardworking man. He commenced life working, and he has been at When he came to the Senate his income was it ever since. something in the neighborhood of $15,000 a year. He came to the Senate in moderate circumstances. He had acquired some property. He owned a good dwelling house at Selma, and he a good plantation. He has been here now for thirty Had he worked at his profession I have no doubt in the world that, on an average, during the time he has been in the Senate his income would have been at least $20,000 a year.

I will not particularly speak of his work here, but I presume it has been as constant and laborious as that which any Senator in this body has ever performed. Senators may say he elected to do that. Certainly he did. But the question is, after having increased the salary of nearly every other officer under the Government, and in view of the fact that there is nobody else who can raise our salaries but the body to which we are attached, shall we be denied some reasonable increase—not full compensation, but some reasonable increase in our salaries?

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Alabama came here in moderate circumstances, and he is in very moderate circumstances to-day. Shall he deny himself the right to a little more adequate compensation? He has had none. His estate is worth only about as much to-day as it was when he came here, and to tell the truth, Mr. President, our people are proud that he is worth no more. It may be a singular sort of thing, but they are proud of him because he has not become rich.

I merely picked out that instance by way of illustration. I do not mean to say there are not various other Senators in the same situation, but I mean to say here is one of the hardest-working lawyers in the United States who might have been a millionaire to-day if he had stuck to his profession. There are other instances of the same sort. I speak of this because I know the facts, and I am not so familiar with the lives of other Senators as I am with his

Mr. CLAPP rose.

So Mr. Mallory's amendment was rejected.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PAT-TERSON], which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That as to the Vice-President of the United States and Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, the compensation above provided for shall not apply for the term or terms for which either has already been elected, or shall be elected in the year 1907; but it shall apply after the expiration of such terms.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the sentiment seems to be so pronounced upon this proposition that I desire to consume no further time of the Senate, and therefore withdraw the amendment, although it expresses my own conviction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BERRY. Let us have the yeas and nays

Mr. SPOONER. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as I stated a moment ago, with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Morgan]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. Therefore I refrain from voting. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL (when Mr. Martin's name was called). I will state that if my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] were here, he would vote "yea," but on this vote he stands paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Patterson].

Mr. NEWLANDS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gamble] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and will vote.

Mr. DANIEL. That there may be no misunderstanding, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is now released and can vote. I announced a pair between the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Colorado. It can stand as the Senator from Nevada has stated it, the Senator from Virginia being paired on this vote with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] may

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that my colleague [Mr. Dolliver] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question.

The result was announced-yeas 53, nays 21, as follows:

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its other amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Cullom, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Teller.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that Senate Document 155, first and second parts, which has been ordered printed and is lying on the table, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think, Mr. President, that the Senate and the country are to be congratulated that a period has been reached in the Brownsville discussion. Nearly if not more than half of the time of this session has been taken, very properly, no doubt, in the discussion of facts and constitutional questions in that great controversy; and now that we are through with it, so far as taking the time of the Senate is concerned—and, as I have said before, it was most properly taken and was most valuable to the whole country—and now that we have voted ourselves an increase of salary, perhaps it is proper to call the attention of the Senate to some other matters of almost as much importance to the nation.

We can profitably use the remainder of the session in dealing with other great questions of nearly equal consequence. It is to call the attention of this body and of the country to what I deem, and think that I shall be able to show, is one of the gravest conditions which confronts this Republic that I have risen this afternoon to speak. I refer, Mr. President, to the condition of the employment of young children in the factories, the mines, and the sweat shops of this country. I mean to call attention to precisely what it means both to these children and to the future of the nation.

I do this upon an amendment which I have offered to the bill to regulate child labor in the District of Columbia. bill, upon which there has been a tacit agreement to vote, is an admirable measure, and I shall of course support it. And yet, in comparison with the general evil, it is trivial, because in Washington less than in any other spot in this country does the vice, and as I shall be able to show, the crime of child labor

It is here no doubt, but it is here in such inconsiderable quantity that in comparison with the great national evil it is not worthy of attention.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have offered as an amendment to the District of Columbia child-labor bill the bill which I offered early in the session, to provide a national method for stopping this distinctly national evil.

And in order that my time may not be consumed, in view of the fact that I have begun to address the Senate at a late hour, I will ask permission, instead of having the bill read at this juncture, that it may be inserted in my remarks.

Briefly, however, I may state to Senators who may want to follow this discussion that the amendment provides for the prohibition of interstate commerce in the products of factories and mines where children under 14 years of age are employed; and it provides appropriate penalties for the violation of its provisions. This brief statement of the bill, its purposes, and its methods will be sufficient to bring to the attention of the Senate a discussion both of the facts which describe the evil that it is intended to cure and of the law as to its constitutionality and legality.

VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is The granted.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Beveridge to the bill (H. R. 17838) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, viz: On page 12, after line 20, insert the following:

Sec. 11. That six months from and after the passage of this act no carrier of interstate commerce shall transport or accept for transportation, from one State or Territory to any other State or Territory or to the District of Columbia or within any Territory, the products of any factory or mine in which children under 14 years of age are employed or permitted to work, which products are offered to said interstate carrier by the firm, person, or corporation owning or operating said factory or mine, or any officer or agent or servant thereof, for transportation from one State or Territory to any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or within any Territory.

Sec. 12. That no carrier of interstate commerce shall transport or accept for transportation, from one State or Territory or within any Territory, the products of any factory or mine offered it for transportation by any person, firm, or corporation which owns or operates such factory or mine, or any officer, agent, or servant of such person, firm, or corporation, until the president or secretary or general manager of such corporation or a member of such firm or the person owning or operating such factory or mine.

Sec. 13. That the form of said affidavit shall be prescribed by the operating such factory or mine shall file with said carrier an affidavit to the effect that children under 14 years of age are not employed in such factory or mine.

Sec. 13. That the form of said affidavit shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. After the first affidavit is filed a like affidavit shall be filed, on or before July 1 and on or before December 31 of each year, with the interstate carrier to which such factory or mine offers its products for transportation; and after the first affidavit subsequent affidavits shall also state that no children under 14 years of age are employed or permitted to work in said factory or mine or have been employed or permitted to work in said factory or mine at any time during the preceding six months.

Sec. 14. That any officer or agent of a carrier of interstate commerce who is a party to any violation of sections 11, 12, or 13 of this act, or who violates any of the provisions of sections 11, 12, or 13 of this act, shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $10,000 nor less than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than $10,000 nor less than six months nor less than one month, or by both said fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. Any person by sections 11, 12, or 13 of this act required to file the affidavit therein provided for who fails or refuses to file such affidavit, or who shall make a false statement in said affidavit, shall be punished by a fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia and to prohibit the transportation by carriers of interstate commerce of the products of mines and factories employing child labor."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the prevalence of these

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the prevalence of these evils, I think, is hardly understood by the Senate. That is most natural, and I am not blaming any Senator or any Member of the House for not understanding the widespread and desperate character of this evil. We have all of us been busy— every man of us—with great questions and large duties which tax our time, and it is not to be supposed, therefore, that we would know as well as perhaps the people of the country themselves know, how far-reaching is this evil and how dreadful is its character. Therefore, I shall take up at the beginning some time in describing it.

THE CENSUS.

have been asked for the census figures. I suppose that, little as all of us know about the matter, we are all familiar with the census figures. The census figures are bad enough, but I shall be able to demonstrate that they are far below the truth.

According to the census of 1900, there are not far from two million children in the United States under 16 years of age working in "gainful occupations."

Of these, according to the census of 1900, nearly seven hundred thousand are employed in industries other than agricultural.

This bill does not strike at the employment of children engaged in agriculture. I do not for a moment pretend that working children on the farm is bad for them.

I think it is the universal experience that where children are employed within their strength and in the open air there can be no better training. All educators have now come to an agreement that the technical schools and the manual training schools in our cities are by far the best features of our educational sys-

And I am in favor of and look forward to the time when, as a part of the educational system of this country, children will be taught to work. For, I repeat, there is no training like labor.

But, Mr. President, the evil at which this bill strikes is not such labor. I may say, and truthfully say, that this bill does not strike at such labor at all. It strikes at child toil, and I will emphasize it still more in saying that it strikes at child slavery in the mines, the factories, and the sweat shops of the nation. That is all this bill strikes at.

CENSUS FIGURES TOO LOW.

Mr. President, I said a moment ago that the census figures, appalling as they are, are notoriously inadequate. Two million children under 16 years of age is bad enough; seven hundred thousand in factories, mills, and sweat shops is bad enough; but there is not a man or woman who has investigated this question who does not know that only a part of the children so employed were returned by the census enumerators, and I shall show before I am through why that is.

But let me give to the Senate some illustrations of the inadequacy of the census figures. For example, the census of 1900 gives Maryland as having something over 5,000 children at work. The census bulletins of 1905 give 5,553 under 16 at work in Maryland, of which 3,666 were in Baltimore.

Very well. In 1906 the Maryland law was amended, requiring children under 16 ing children under 16 to secure permits testifying to physical and educational requirements. The law has been in force about five months and a half, and already more than 11,000 permits have been granted and between 1,200 and 1,500 refused; so we see that in the State of Maryland the census of 1900 is by the record 100 per cent below the truth.

Then again, the census bulletin in 1905, that is even later than 1900, gives the number of males in cotton mills in North Carolina at 31,231. The labor commissioner of North Carolina gives 44,222 operatives, which would make 52,025 for all the mills in the same ratio.

Again, it is estimated and given, I think, by the census of 1900 that the total of children employed in Southern cotton mills, as, for example, in North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, and Georgia, is something under 30,000.

Yet the testimony of those who have investigated the conditions upon the ground and who have not taken the returns of manufacturers who have children in their employ is that the lowest possible estimate, excluding every possible fraction of children who were questionable, numbers at least 60,000. So, Mr. President, we see that the census, bad as that isterrible as it is-is totally inaccurate. Anybody who has studied this question knows why it is inaccurate.

· False certificates, which are universal; the hiding of children when the factory inspector comes; the reliance of the census enumerator upon reports of interested parties; all these very naturally acted to give only a fraction of this terrible truth.

Again, at that time the attention of the country had not been called to this evil. It is the conservative testimony of men and women who have given years of investigation to this subject that there are to-day in this country not less than 2,000,000 children at work, of whom more than half a million are employed in factories, mines, and sweat shops. I quote from Mr. Spargo, who is perhaps as accurate an authority upon this subject as anyone. Says Mr. Spargo:

I am convinced that the number of children under 15 years of age who work is much larger than the official figures give, notwithstanding that these are supposed to give the number of all workers under 16 years of age. It would, I think, be quite within the mark to say that the number of child workers under 15 is at least 2,250,000.

So, Mr. President, I suppose it is clear to everyone that we can see that the census figures are much below the truth.

I suppose we may say, putting it upon a conservative basis, that as I speak to you there are now not less than 1,000,000 children under 16 years of age (and I shall show by sworn testimony that some of them are five and six and seven years of age) at work in the coal mines, in factories, and in the sweat shops of this nation.

These are figures, Mr. President; but figures give no idea of hat this means. Of course no Senator here would permit his what this means. boy or girl under 16 to work in a coal breaker or in a sweatshop or a factory. But it is not the children are involved; it is the children of the people. But it is not the children of Senators who

ALL STATEMENTS SWORN TO.

Yet if I were merely to say that so many children were employed, that would give no idea of what this evil is. Figures can not, of course, describe it. Figures only give you an idea of its extent. I propose now to describe it. I propose to show to the Senate and the country precisely what it means, and I shall do this by the description of these children at work, of how their work is conducted, of its effect upon them, and in each instance by the testimony of eyewitnesses who have personally investigated this matter.

And, Mr. President, I shall not give a single statement here today that is not now supported by an affidavit, or will not be almost immediately. For I am perfectly well aware that no statement which is made in the description of this evil will go unchallenged. Therefore, instead of stating facts by merely reading an article and letting the statement go at that, as is our custom when debating amongst each other, I have resolved to support each of the incidents which I shall give by the sworn testimony of the man or the woman who gives it.

Then if any of the great cotton factories, South and North, if any of the mining interests in Pennsylvania or elsewhere, if any of the railroad systems, if any of the owners of glass factories think that they have been injured by these statements, they will have an opportunity to question men and women who are willing to stand that test of having made affidavit to the truth of all they state.

The course of this argument will be merely this: First, to state the facts.

Then to state, as well as I can, the entire legality of the remedy I propose.

For if the facts convince the Senate that this is a national evil of such a crying nature that it ought to be cured; and if I can show that the method I propose is within the power of Congress, of course the conclusion is that the law must be enacted.

THE EVIDENCE OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read the following affidavit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF JOHN SPARGO.

CITY OF YONKERS, County of Westchester, N. Y.

CITY OF YONKERS, County of Westchester, N. Y.

John Spargo, of said city and county, being duly sworn, deposes that he is the author of the book entitled "The Bitter Cry of the Children," of which the Macmillan Company, New York City, are the publishers and owners of copyright. Deponent swears that the instances, occurrences, and conversations given as illustrations or examples in the section of the aforesaid published work which bears the chapter title "The working child," so far as he states that they were witnessed, heard, or examined by himself in person, were so witnessed or heard or examined by himself in person, were so witnessed or heard or examined by himself in person, and that each one of the same is true.

Deponent further saith that the greater part of the section of the book in question being composed of documentary evidence and inferences therefrom which said deponent believeth to be reasonable and fair, a list of authorities for each and all the citations made and incorporated into the argument of the chapter aforesaid is contained on pages 314 to 319, inclusive; and that after careful expert investigation he truly believes that the statements so specified are each and every one substantially true, containing no material errors.

John Spargo.

Haetford, January 21, 1907.

HARTFORD, January 21, 1907.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, Hartford County, 88:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public, John Spargo, and made oath to the foregoing affidavit.

EDWARD S. STEELE, Notary Public.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, before I go on I want to say that the examples which I am giving are by no means the worst ones. I do not propose to refer to what can be referred to and proved unless the indifference of the Senate compels it—such, for example, as the pouring of cold water on little children to keep them awake after they have worked standing on their feet ten hours.

Furthermore, in reading what is sworn to in each one of these affidavits, I have carefully excluded everything that might be called the "excited sentimentality" of the writers; "excited" by the horrible things which they witnessed themselves. shall confine the statements that I am going to read to the Senate to such as are typical—not the worst nor the best, but such as are typical—every one of which I will support by affidavits and further proof if anyone questions those statements.

Mr. Spargo gives the following example:

During the Philadelphia textile workers' strike in 1903 I saw at least a score of children ranging from 8 to 10 years of age who had been working in the mills prior to the strike.

Ten years of age, working in the mills prior to the strike, 9 years old in Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, where the law limit is 14 years, and at the lowest for such work as that for the last seven years, 13 years. Mr. Spargo goes on:

One little girl of 9 I saw in Kensington Labor Lyceum. She had been working for almost a year.

That is, she had been working at 8.

Before the strike began, she said, and a "careful inquiry proved her story to be true."

Here is another example. This is from Paterson, N. J.:

At 6 o'clock the whistles shrieked and the streets were suddenly filled with people, many of them mere children. Of all the crowd of tired, pallid, and languid looking children I could only get speech with one, a little girl who claimed 13 years, though she was smaller than many a child of 10.

Indeed, as I think of her now, I doubt whether she would have come up to the standard of normal physical development either in weight or stature for a child of 10.

One learns, however, not to judge the ages of working children by their physical appearance, for they are usually behind other children in height, weight, and girth of chest, often as much as two or three years.

I shall insert in my remarks at the proper place the difference in height, amounting in some instances to as much as 4 inches, between men and women who have worked as children and those who have not worked as children. Says Mr. Spargo:

If my little Paterson friend was 13, perhaps the nature of her employment will explain her puny, stunted body. She works in the "steaming room" of the flax mill.

I do not think that you will find in this, as we go along, any particular materials for amusement; Senators seem to think it very funny. Mr. Spargo continues:

All day long in a room filled with clouds of steam, she has to stand barefooted in pools of water twisting coils of wet hemp. When I saw her she was dripping acct, though she said that she had worn a rubber apron all day. In the coldest evenings of winter little Marie and hundreds of other little girls must go out from the superheated steaming rooms into the bitter cold in just that condition.

To that statement Mr. Spargo makes affidavit.

Here is the description of the labor of children in a certain kind of glass factory. He describes how he went to this factory and goes on as follows:

CHILD LABOR IN GLASS FACTORIES.

It was a big wooden structure, so loosely built that it afforded little protection from drafts, and surrounded by a high fence with several rows of barbed wire stretched across the top. I went with the foreman of the factory and he explained to me the reason for the stockade-like of the factory and he explained to me the reason for the stockade-like fence.

"It keeps the young imps inside once we've got 'em for the night shift." he said.

The "young imps" were, of course, the boys employed, about forty in number, at least ten of whom were less than 12 years of age.

It was a cheap bottle factory, and the proportion of boys to men was larger than is usual in the higher grades of manufacture. Cheapness and child labor go together—the cheaper the grade of manufacture, as a rule, the cheaper the labor employed.

The hours of labor for "the night shift" were from 5.30 p. m. to 5.30 a.m.

3.30 a.m.
I stayed and watched the boys at their work for several hours, and when their tasks were done saw them disappear into the darkness and storm of the night.

Now, he describes-and I suppose it is of some concern to the Senate of the United States to know what kind of citizens we are going to have in the future-

In the middle of the room was a large

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator state where the factory

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know whether he states where the factory was. He says:

I shall never forget my first visit to a glass factory at night.

Mr. GALLINGER. He does not state where? Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but he makes affidavit to the effect that he personally examined this and it was true. Wherever he gives the location, of course I shall give it. However, I wish to stop right here and say that I will give other descriptions of these glass factories, almost identical with the breakers and of work of boys in the breakers, and a great many more of the cotton mills of the South.

And if the Senate is not convinced by this mass of testimony, I shall present more-much more. For I warn the enemies of this reform that this testimony will be only the beginning if more is found necessary.

And I shall show precisely what children do in these mills and mines and sweatshops, and precisely what effect it has on them. In each instance where the author gives the place I shall give it, and in each instance I shall present the affidavit or state it in substance or why I do not give it.

Here is Mr. Spargo's description of a glass factory :

In the middle of the room was a large round furnace with a number of small doors, 3 or 4 feet from the ground, forming a sort of belt around the furnace. In front of these doors the glass blowers were working.

Then he describes the labor of glass blowers:

Then began the work of the boys. By the side of each mold sat a "take-out boy," who, with tongs, took the half-finished bottles—not yet provided with necks—out of the molds. Then other boys, called "snapper-ups," took these bodies of bottles in their tongs and put the small ends into gas-heated molds till they were red hot.

Then the boys took them out with almost incredible quickness and passed them to other men—"finishers"—who shaped the necks of the bottles into their final form.

Then the "carrying-in boys," sometimes called "carrier pigeons," took the red-hot bottles from the benches, three or four at a time, upon big asbestos shovels to the annealing oven, where they are gradually cooled off to insure even contraction and to prevent breaking in consequence of too rapid cooling.

The work of these "carrying-in boys," several of whom were less than 12 years old, was by far the hardest of all. They were kept on a slow run all the time from the benches to the annealing oven and back again.

a slow run all the time from the benches to the annually oback again.

The distance to the annualling oven in the factory in question was 100 feet, and the boys made seventy-two trips per hour, making the distance traveled in eight hours nearly 22 miles. Over half of this distance the boys were carrying their hot loads to the oven. The pay of these boys varies from 60 cents to a dollar for eight hours' work.

A continued uninterrupted "trot"—that is the term they use for it-without rest, without cessation, without relaxation of nerve or muscle in the superheated atmosphere of the factory.

But listen to Mr. Spargo:

About a year ago I gathered particulars of the pay of 257 boys in New Jersey and Pennsylvania; the lowest pay was 40 cents per night and the highest $1.10, while the average was 72 cents.

Before I leave the subject of glass factories I wish to read a description of the investigation of the glass factory at Alton, III. I think it was by Mrs. Florence Kelley will be known, I think, to most, at least, of the older Senators here. She is the daughter of Congressman William D. Kelley, who was so long a prominent Member of the other House. She is a very earnest worker in the reform of child-labor laws, and I think it is probably due to her as much as to anybody else that the Illinois child-labor law, which is now perhaps the most perfect child-labor law in the United States, was passed.

Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read the following affidavit. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF FLORENCE KELLEY.

I hereby certify that the statements contained in my book entitled "Some Ethical Gains Through Legislation," published by the Macmillan Company, are correct, except so far as certain State laws have been enacted or amended since the publication of the volume in November, 1905.

FLORENCE KELLEY. Sworn to before me this 25th day of January, 1907.

[SEAL.]

No. 114. Notary Public, Kings County.

(Certificate filed in New York County.)

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mrs. Kelley says:

The earnings of the glass-bottle blowers depend somewhat upon the speed of the boys who fetch and carry for them. These lads are therefore kept trotting at the highest speed which a child can maintain for several hours.

In making inspections of the glass-bottle works the writer found it impossible to get from a boy a consecutive statement as to his name, address or preparates.

impossible to get from a boy a consecutive statement as to his name, address, or parentage.

A boy would say, "My name is Jimmie," and then trot to the cooling oven with his load of bottles and returning say, in answer to a fresh question, "I live in a shanty boat," then trot to the molder for another set of bottles and returning say, "I'm going to be 8 next summer," and so on.

Among twenty-four lads questioned during one night inspection not one ventured to pause long enough to put together two of the foregoing statements.

And the eye of the boy interrupted in his work was always fastened anxiously upon the blower for whom he was working.

The blower did not pay the boy, who was carried on the pay rolls of the company; but when a boy was detained for the purpose of questioning a shrill whistle sounded and the boy would say to the inspector, "Don't you hear him doggin' me?"

Mr. HOPKINS. The inspection which the Senator from Indiana has just described was made before the passage of the present law to which he refers, I presume.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that was when Mrs. Kelley was trying to get the present law passed. That inspection was prior to the passage of the Illinois law; but I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I shall present an affidavit of a woman-I think the Senator knows her very well-relative to that very subject, in which she states that the law, excellent as it is, is violated now in that very town.

CHILD LABOR IN THE COAL "BREAKERS."

Now, Mr. President, I wish to leave the glass factories, so far as Mr. Spargo is concerned, in order to save time. I intend to take them up in their order and shall take each up at the proper time. I have given some figures about the work of children in the Pennsylvania mines. Here is what Mr. Spargo, who personally investigated this thing, says about that. I think I had better give it now:

According to the census of 1900, there were 25,000 boys under 16 years of age employed in and around the mines and quarries of the United States. In the State of Pennsylvania alone—the State which enslaves more children than any other—there are thousands of little "breaker boys" employed, many of them not more than 9 or 10 years old.

The law forbids the employment of children under 14, and the records of the mines generally show that the law is "obeyed."

Yet, in May, 1905, an investigation by the national child labor committee showed that in one small borough of 7,000 population among the boys employed in breakers 35 were 9 years old, 40 were 10, 45 were 11, and 45 were 12—over 150 boys illegally employed in one section of boy labor in one small town!

During the anthracite coal strike of 1902 I attended the Labor Day demonstration at Pittston and witnessed the parade of another at Wilkes-Barre. In each case there were hundreds of boys marching, all of them wearing their "working buttons," testifying to the fact that they were bona fide workers. Scores of them were less than 10 years of age; others were 11 or 12.

He describes the week these boys were daing and I shall

He describes the work these boys were doing, and I shall have several witnesses on that.

Work in the coal breakers is exceedingly hard and dangerous. Crouched over the chutes, the boys sit hour after hour, picking out the pieces of slate and other refuse from the coal as it rushes past to the washers. From the cramped position they have to assume most of them become more or less deformed and bent backed, like old men.

When a boy has been working for some time and begins to get round shouldered, his fellows say that "he's got his boy to carry round wherever he goes." The coal is hard, and accidents to the hands, such as cut, broken, or crushed fingers, are common among the boys. Some times there is a worse accident. A terrified shriek is heard, and a boy is mangled and torn in the machinery, or disappears in the chute, to be picked out later smothered and dead.

He gives some examples of that

He gives some examples of that.

He gives some examples of that.

Clouds of dust fill the breakers and are inhaled by the boys, laying the foundations for asthma and miners' consumption.

I once stood on a breaker for half an hour and tried to do the work a 12-year old boy was doing day after day, for ten hours at a stretch, for 60 cents a day.

The gloom of the breaker appalled me. Outside the sun shone brightly, the air was pelucid, and the birds sang in chorus with the trees and the rivers.

Within the breaker there was blackness, clouds of deadly dust enfolded everything, the harsh, grinding roar of the machinery and the ceaseless rushing of coal through the chutes filled the ears.

I tried to pick out the pieces of slate from the hurrying stream of coal, often missing them; my hands were bruised and cut in a few minutes. I was covered from head to foot with coal dust, and for many hours afterwards I was expectorating some of the small particles of anthracite I had swallowed. I could not do that work and live; but there were boys of 10 and 12 years of age doing it for 50 and 60 cents a day. Some of them had never been inside of a school; few of them could read a child's primer.

From the breakers the boys graduate to the mine depth, where they become door tenders, switch boys, or mule drivers. Here, far below the surface, the work is still more dangerous.

Mr. Spargo has made an affidavit to the truthfulness of these statements.

He proceeds to describe the work the boy is put to do in the mines. It is done many hundreds or thousands of feet, what-ever the depth may be, beneath the earth.

Here is another example taken from another industry:

In New Jersey and Pennsylvania I have seen hundreds of children, boys and girls, between the ages of 10 and 12 years, at work in the factories belonging to the "cigar trust." Some of these factories are known as "kindergartens" on account of the large number of small children employed in them. It is by no means a rare occurrence for children in these factories to faint or to fall asleep over their work, and I have heard a foreman in one of them say that it was "enough for one man to do just to keep the kids awake."

In the domestic manufacture of cheap cigars many very young children are employed. Often the "factories" are poorly lighted, ill-ventilated tenements in which work, whether for children or adults, ought to be absolutely prohibited. Children work often as many as fourteen or even sisteen hours in these little "home factories," and in cities like Pittsburg, Pa., it is not unusual for them, after attending school all day, to work from 4 p. m. to 12.30 a. m. making "tobles" or "stogles," for which they receive from 8 to 10 cents per hundred.

I shall show, when I come to the point at which I shall show

I shall show, when I come to the point at which I shall show that the State laws are not enforced-shamefully not enforced-that the same thing is done in York, and that children as young as 3 years of age are required to work nearly all day and at night until as late as 10 o'clock.

I now ask to have read the affidavit which I send to the Secretary's desk

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, 88:

Owen R. Lovejoy, assistant secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, of said city and county, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the instances, occurrences, and conversations given by him in his article in the Outlook August 26, 1905, entitled "Schoolhouse or breaker," and in the Woman's Home Companion September, 1906, entitled "In the shadow of the coal breaker," were witnessed or heard or examined by him in person, and that each one of the same is true.

Owen R. Lovejoy.

[SEAL.]

Notary Public for the City and County of New York.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In addition to the fact that Mr. Lovejoy makes affidavit to this, I will state that this is published in the Outlook.

The Outlook is not one of "them there magazines," as a very prominent opponent of this bill describes these publications. The Outlook is probably as high class a publication as there is in this country or in the world; and I believe it to be true—at least I have understood—that nothing appears in this magazine which its great editor, Dr. Lyman Abbott, who is beloved by the American people as much as he is trusted by them, does not feel willing to vouch for himself.

So that the testimony which I am going to give is of the highest possible character that could be adduced, unless you were to produce the witness on the floor of the Senate and crossquestion him, and afterwards establish his reputation for "truth and veracity." Says Mr. Lovejoy, describing the breakers.

I will cut out everything except the definite facts speaking of the abuse and nonenforcement of the law-and the State laws are utterly inadequate everywhere.

The best inspection in this country by far is in the State of Illinois, as it is the second best law in the Nation and one of the best in the world. And yet I shall show by a great woman from your own town, Jane Addams, and the rest of the people who have investigated this will testify, that the law is not observed.

This is a description of the coal breakers of Pennsylvania and the nonenforcement of the law there. This is in August, 1905.

Says Mr. Lovejoy, under oath:

One group of little men, a picked squad from a company of twenty boys, only three of whom claimed to be old enough to meet the legal requirements of employment, were induced to tell the truth to one who was neither an "inspector" nor a "truant efficer."

The reason the author says that is because boys will get from their parents certificates that they are 14 years of age, which is the required age (although they are only 8 or 10), or whatever is necessary. They have a common expression in the coal-mining regions of Pennsylvania concerning these certificates of age.

A boy will say: "I got it of the squire." He goes to the "squire," it seems, and pays 25 cents, or his father does, and he gets a "certificate," he, of course, "swearing" to it. But they are not held accountable, because they do not believe that their jobs are in danger. Oh, they are great things, those State laws!

Here are some more of Mr. Lovejoy's sworn statements:

Here are some more of Mr. Lovejoy's sworn statements:

And their answers were as follows:

"Nine; goin' on 10."

"Nine years old."

"Ten; goin' to be 11."

"Nine last June."

"Ten; goin' for 'leven."

An examination of the school records confirmed the statement of the boys. Relations of almost intimate friendship sprung out of a brief visit to this breaker, due, perhaps, partly to the courage the boys may have ascribed to a stranger who would venture into the place of their daily labor.

The coal at this breaker is cleaned "dry," and the dust arises in a cloud that hovers above the building sometimes for an hour after the day's work is done. The boys wear mine lamps in their caps—

That is in the daytime, you understand—

That is in the daytime, you understand-to enable them to see the coal at their feet.

An attempt to photograph the interior of the breaker in operation with time exposures varying from three to thirty seconds, made no impression on the film. At a neighboring breaker, better equipped with fans for drawing off the dust, a dim picture was secured.

Here twenty-two boys were interviewed at the noon interval, of whom all were under 14 years except one Scotch boy—14—whose age by the school record was found to be 10, and one Irish boy of 15, who has been out of school for over six years. Of the others, one was 9—8 by the school record—three were 10, two were 11, six were 12, and three were 13, although the school record showed one of the 13-year-old boys to be 11.

Now, Mr. President and Senators, mark the ages—8, 9, 10, 11, 12—although the law of that State requires that it shall be 14 at the minimum and 16 at the maximum for certain kinds of work in the mine.

Now, what kind of work is it that boys of that age are doing? Let us find out. Mr. Lovejoy tells us:

For nine hours a day these little fellows toil in the breaker-Nine hours, mind you-

For nine hours a day these little fellows toil in the breaker, bending over the coal chute, with their feet in the coal, picking out the rock and slate. We are often asked whether this air is bad for the health! A five-minute visit to such a breaker will coat the lungs and throat with a black dust which twenty-four hours of pure air can not clear from the mucous linings.

Boys 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 years of age work nine hours a day under those circumstances!

This nine-hour day is broken by the dinner "hour," beginning in some breakers at 12.05 and ending at 12.25!—

Are Senators willing to take such a hurried lunch as that? And would Senators permit their children to eat so hurriedly? Of course all of us are anxious to have our own children work like these boys work, for are we not all "self-made men?" But isn't the eating a little hard? Twenty minutes for lunch in a nine-hour day for boys of that age in a breaker! But let us follow Mr. Lovejoy. He says, and under oath:

allowing the boys twenty minutes to swallow the contents of their dinner pails, with unwashed hands and dust-filled throat and lungs—and this is the visitor's opportunity.

Mr. Lovejoy, from having experience in the mines, from having gone into the breaker and trying to do a boy's work, describes just what that means. He says:

describes just what that means. He says:

To sit bent over a stream of coal which pours out a cloud of dust so thick that the light can not penetrate; to be responsible for the exact separation from the coal of all slate and rock, depending often entirely upon the sense of touch; to endure the incessant rattle of deafening gigantic machinery; to suffer the stiffing summer heat and the choice between the blasts that sweep these moutain tops and the cloud of smothering dust in the winter; to be conscious that the "boss" stands behind with a stick or small piece of coal to prompt to duty if the natural exuberance of childhood breaks out in playfulness or if backache induces a moment of forgetfulness; to have the hands cut and crippled and hardened by contact with the rough stones and bits of sharp-edeged coal; to learn to control the nausea caused by swallowing quantities of coal dust, and by the feeling that one's throat and lungs are never clean—

That is the description of the work that these boys are called to do in the breakers.

Mr. President, I wonder if when people find what they call a "clinker" in their coal, they know just what that means? This what it means: It means that one boy's eye has become dimmed after nine hours' work; that his fingers are bleeding, and he has neglected to get out the slate or the slag, which it is his business to pick from among the coal, and that, going into the coal and finally going into our furnaces, constitutes a "clinker."

So every time you find a "clinker" in your grate or stove you may know that it represents the utter exhaustion of a boy from 8 years old to, perhaps, 14 years old.

Then Mr. Lovejoy, who is a very conservative writer, as you may judge from what he says, continues:

If these were isolated instances of premature child labor, there would still remain cause for a protest against that which sacrifices life for gold, for the progress of the race waits breathless upon the unfolding of every human life.

But this appropriation of the days of childhood to the service of material gain is a settled policy of the coal region, against which the best public sentiment has hardly ventured to express disapproval.

Well, I think we, the representatives of the American people in Congress, had better stop that "settled policy of the coal regions." The State has not and can not.

Those who do not participate in the custom still condone it with the mature wisdom that "the children are better off than they would be running the streets."

But, Mr. President, I have actually heard that very same "argument" here in conversation on the floor of this Senate.

Then Mr. Lovejoy proceeds to describe the extent of this child labor in this particular instance and the extent to which the children are taken from school, or rather the extent to which the schools are emptied of children in this process of working in the breakers.

There are other forms of labor for boys, both in the breaker and in the mine. Boys are employed to "sprag" the cars as they come from the shaft to the top of the breaker building, to tend to chutes, to turn switches, and to drive the mules that haul the cars.

One bright little fellow, who was just 14 years old on June 6, has been working here, tending the chutes, for two years. He carns 6 cents an hour. Inside the mine the boys will tell you they are "tending gate," or "driving team," or "spraggin" cars and "branchin' empties."

One of these little boys, 14 years old, who has been employed in the mine two and one-half years—

That is, that he began at 111 years of age-

That is, that he began at 11½ years of age—after having worked in the breaker a year and a half, seems to find the company of "Baldy," the mule, quite congenial, and is credited with a more unabridged command of sacred language than is possessed by any other man on the job. This work is better paid, but the langers are greater and the number of boys employed is far less.

If the employment of little children in the breaker can be restricted, there will be slight difficulty in regulating the employment of children under proper age at other forms of mine labor.

On every hand are found bright boys, and even grown youth, who are entirely liliterate. This is not surprising of the newly arrived immigrant, but it is difficult to suppress a feeling of resentment against a custom which brings you face to face with English and Welsh young men, 18 or 20 years of age—not vagrants, but steady, industrious tollers—who can not read a word of our language.

The memory of one such stands out in striking relief. He is 18 years old, and when asked to read a simple sentence said pathetically,
"I can't read; I've worked in the coal mines every day for the past nine years."

This, Mr. President, is Mr. Lovejov's description of working

This, Mr. President, is Mr. Lovejoy's description of working in the breakers; and while I am on this point I might as well finish Mr. Spargo's testimony. This also, which I am going to read, is included in the affidavit which I have had the Secretary read from the desk.

This is a description giving the names, places, and ages of the boys in the breakers of the Pennsylvania mines. It may be a little monotonous; it may not be as interesting as some other large questions—some "constitutional questions"—but it is a matter of vital concern to the American people, and it is necessary to take the time to show just precisely, in detail, what this labor means.

Nor would I do it if it had not been written by the most careful of men. So far as these men are concerned, I personally know some of them. There are some others that I do not know, who swear to the truth of their testimony. Quoting the boss of a breaker, Mr. Lovejoy says:

"The little devils like it," he continued, as some remark from his sentimental visitor expressed a protest against such work for little boys. They sat, about forty in number, bent over the troughs in which the coal came pouring down from the crushing machinery—

I suppose everybody here knows what a breaker is. A breaker is a gigantic building built very high at one end and lower at the other, to the high end of which the coal is lifted from the mine.

There are then chutes through which this coal passes by zigzag paths until it enters into and runs across this chute, through which the coal passes in great streams.

There are crosspieces, and on those crosspieces these boys sit and bend over all day long-it used to be ten hours a day, it is now nine hours a day.

The boys stoop and catch the coal with their feet as it rushes past them and pick out the pieces of stone and slate.

That is what a breaker is, and that is the work of the breaker boys.

They sat, about forty in number, bent over the troughs in which the coal came pouring down from the crushing machinery, and with rough and hardened but deft little fingers picked out the slate and rock and "bony" from among the pieces of coal. Indeed, the jovial grins on the black faces of the boys as they watched the stranger feel his way through the dust and among the timbers of the breakers seemed to confirm the eulogy upon their occupation.

That is, the eulogy of the boss.

The dust which blinded the eyes and filled the nasal passages and choked and strangled one unaccustomed to such air had become their element, and one instinctively felt that were they brought into the sunlight they would blink and shrink from the glare of day.

The breaker makes no effort to brighten its darkness or hush the hideous roar. In fact, the very mystery and danger of it are elements of attractiveness to boy life. The boy sits bent over his task for eight or nine hours every day. His back aches with the stoop and monotonous swing as he throws the slate and rock aside, while the coal runs through between his little feet. During the first weeks of his labor his hands are cut and torn, his nails are broken off, and the pain of handling the sharp stones and slate is intense.

At the earliest possible age—in many parts of the region at 9 or 10 years, though the law forbids his employment under 14—he is off for the coal breaker, with or without a few months in school, and he is thenceforward a trifling factor in a gigantic industrial process.

Twelve thousand little boys, ranging in age from 9 to 14 years, are believed to be working in the coal breakers of the anthracite field. This estimate was made a year ago after an investigation by the National Child Labor Committee. Another investigation just completed, also covering an extensive area of the region, confirms the former estimate, although, unfortunately, no accurate figures, either official or unofficial, are available.

Mr. President, I next send to the Secretary's desk and ask to have read the affidavit of Kellogg Durland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, 88:

Kellogg Durland, of said city and county, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the instances, occurrences, and conversations given by him in his article in the Outlook, May 9, 1903, entitled "Child Labor in Pennsylvania," were witnessed or heard or examined by him in person, and that each one of the same is true to the best of his knowledge or Sworn and subscribed to before me this 22d day of January, 1907.

[SEAL.]

C. F. RIGOULOT,

Notary Public No. 45, New York County.

(Commission expires March 30, 1908.)

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the last affidavit which I Mr. Durland, also is in the Outlook, the high quality of whose articles is very well known to the entire reading world. I am giving this somewhat at length, because I wish to leave no Senator on either side of the Chamber any excuse, even if any of them desire an excuse, which, of course, they do not, for not giving their whole attention to this mighty human evil, and also through the channels of the Congressional Record to put these facts before the country.

Therefore I am going into details and shall go into more details hereafter. This is also a description of the work of children in Pennsylvania.

ANOTHER KIND OF CHILD SLAVERY.

Helen Sisscak, a wan mite of a girl, who spoke no English, told Judge Gray that she cleaned bobbins at 3 cents an hour. She went to work at half past 6 at night and worked till half past 6 in the morning.

I think it is a most appropriate time to consider some facts like those. We have just voted ourselves $7,500 a year salary, and properly voted ourselves that salary. Even that does not pay for the work that a hard-working Senator does here, and every one of us knows it. Still this salary was a matter of mighty interest to us-it is our salary, you know. But here is a girl not 9 years old, who for 3 cents an hour begins work at half past 6 at night and works until half past 6 in the morning.

I tell the Senate that if the Senate and the country do not give some serious attention to human facts like that, we need not wonder at the creation of a class in this country which when we contemplate its existence makes every one of us tremble. It is quite as important to stop the labor of these children in Pennsylvania and in North Carolina as it is even to vote ourselves $7,500 a year salary, which we have just now so properly done.

Mr. Durland continues:

It took her nearly an hour to get from her home to the mill, and the road led across fields that were exposed to the storms that sweep down the valley.

Does the Senate find that amusing-a girl going a mile or more across a storm-swept valley to begin work at half past 6 at night and work until 6 in the morning for 3 cents an hour? If so, I shall present some examples from other States that perhaps will amuse the Senate still more.

Says Mr. Durland:

I have gone over that very road in a winter afternoon when the bleak winds and snow were blowing from the hills, and it was a journey I should not care to make often. It was when this child had finished her story that Judge Gray exclaimed, with much feeling: "Here we actually find the flesh and blood of little children coined into money;" and, shortly after, "This matter of night labor by young girls should be thoroughly investigated by those who will not shirk the work and the result made known in every part of Pennsylvania." This work has been done. been done.

That is the work that Judge Gray suggested.

Yet the indifferentism of legislators or the lack of public pressure has resulted in a continuance of the system, with never a strong hand raised in protest.

That particular part of Mr. Durland's article I desire to lay aside until I take up the subject of the efforts of those who are interested in child labor to defeat child-labor legislation when it is presented in their respective States.

Then Mr. Durland takes up the work of the boys on the breakers and describes it.

Mr. President, it has been suggested to me that on account of the lateness of the hour and the importance, especially of the legal part, of this argument, which, I am told, Senators desire to hear most, I suspend to-day and go on to-morrow. I am willing to do that, but I see that the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] has given notice that he will occupy the attention of the Senate immediately after the routine morning If I could find the Senator from Monbusiness to-morrow. tana, and he would give way to me for the completion of my argument in the morning, I would be very glad to yield. On account of having gotten started so late, I see it is going to be impossible to reach what, I am told, will interest Senators most, which is the presentation of the legal portion of this case.

Mr. CARTER entered the Chamber.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. With the consent and by the very great courtesy of the Senator from Montana, who has given notice of his intention to address the Senate upon another subject to-morrow morning, I will suspend for the present and continue in the morning. I wish to say that I regret that the appropriation bill took so long, for if I had had any notion that it would take longer than half past 1 o'clock I would have asked the Senator in charge of the bill to let the appropriation bill follow my argument, because I want my argument to be complete and unbroken. But in view of the fact that that was not done-and of course it was quite proper for all Senators to express themselves upon that important measure, a thing to which I did not object at all-my argument has been postponed until a very late hour in the day, and it is absolutely impossible to conclude even the question of facts this afternoon. A part of the facts which I shall present I desire to submit when the entire Senate is present, and particularly Senators on the other side of the Chamber, because they affect conditions in many of their States, which I know are as reprehensible in their epinion as in the opinion of any other Senator on the floor. I am satisfied they will be glad to hear it. It is absolutely out of the question to begin the discussion of the legal phase of the bill this afternoon. I shall hope to be able to show that there is no doubt about the legality and constitutionality of this measure.

I want to say in advance that I am personally very much obliged to the Senator from Montana for his courtesy

Mr. CARTER. I understand from the Senator from Indiana that he will probably get through his remarks by the hour of 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If I begin at half past 12, I should say so. I might run longer, I will say to the Senator, and if that is not convenient to the Senator from Montana and his remarks are not going to be extensive, I could come in after him.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to accommodate myself to the Senator's convenience, but at the same time I should like very much to dispose of the subject I have in hand to-morrow

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, of course.

Mr. CARTER. Before or immediately after 2 o'clock. If it can be personally adjusted between the Senator and myself as to the order-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; so that we can both go on to-morrow. I suspect it will finally take this form: The Senator intimated to me that it will probably take an hour for his remarks. We will undoubtedly get through the morning business to-morrow by half past 12, and I think it might be better for the Senator to make his remarks first, as he would get through, according to his estimate, at half past 1, and then I could take the floor and have uninterrupted sway for the remainder of my argument.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator from Indiana would not be limited then.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No. That would mean that I could go on at half past 1 and not be limited, as the Senator from Illinois suggests.

Mr. CARTER. That will probably turn out to be the fact.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I call your attention to the great desirability of enacting legislation to help American shipping and American trade by encouraging the building and running of lines of large and swift steamers to South America and the Orient.

The urgent need of our country's making an effort to do something.

I call your attention to the great desirability of enacting legislation to help American shipping and American trade by encouraging the building and running of lines of large and swift steamers to South American treed four country's making an effort to do something like its share of its own carrying trade on the ocean has been called to our attention in striking fashion by the experiences of Secretary Root on his recent South American tour. The result of these experiences he has set forth in his address before the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress, at Kansas City, Mo., on November 20 last, an address so important that it deserves the careful study of all public men.

The facts set forth by Mr. Root are striking, and they can not but arrest the attention of our people. The great continent to the south of us, which should be knit to us by the closest commercial ties, is hardly in direct commercial communication with us at all, its commercial relations being almost exclusively with Europe. Between all the principal South American ports and Europe lines of swift and commodious steamers, subsidized by their home governments, ply regularly. States, in some steamers between these ports and the United States. In some square, the state of this state of the states in a subsidiary essels, two of which were in distress. One prime reason for this state of things is the fact that those who now do business on the sea do business in a world not of natural competition but of subsidized competition. State aid to steamship lines is as much a part of the commercial system of to-day as State employment of consults to promote business. Our commercial competitions in Europe pay in the aggregate some twenty-five millions a year to their steamship lines—Great Britain paying nearly seven millions. Japan pays between three and four millions. By the proposed legislation of the United States will still pay relatively less than any one of competition to contend merely against the subsidization of their foreign competitors. The higher wa reserve.

The bill provides for 14 steamships, subsidized to the extent of over a million and a half, from the Atlantic coast, all to run to South American ports. It provides on the Pacific coast for 22 steamers subsidized to the extent of two millions and a quarter, some of these to run to South America, most of them to Manila, Australia, and Asia.

Be it remembered that while the ships will be owned on the coasts, the cargoes will largely be supplied by the interior, and that the bill will benefit the Mississippi Valley as much as it benefits the seaboard.

I have laid stress upon the benefit to be expected from our trade with South America. The lines to the Orient are also of vital importance. The commercial possibilities of the Pacific are unlimited, and for national reasons it is imperative that we should have direct and adequate communication by American lines with Hawaii and the Philippines. The existence of our present steamship lines on the Pacific is seriously threatened by the foreign subsidized lines. Our communications with the markets of Asia and with our own possessions in the Philippines, no less than our communications with Australia, should depend not upon foreign, but upon our own steamships. The Southwest and the Northwest should alike be served by these lines, and if this is done they will also give to the Mississippi Valley throughout its entire length the advantage of all trans-continental railways running to the Pacific coast. To fail to establish adequate lines on the Pacific is equivalent to proclaiming to the world that we have neither the ability nor the disposition to contend for our rightful share of the commerce of the Orient; nor yet to protect our interests in the Philippines. It would surely be discreditable for us to surrender to our commercial rivals the great commerce of the Orient, the great commerce we should have with South America, and even our own communications with Hawaii and the Philippines.

I carnestly hope for the enactment of some law like the bill in question.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Agriculture, by the direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I will ask for the consideration of the bill to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve inself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24640) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes. And pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between the two sides, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension bill, and pending that asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan how long general debate is likely to run.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is quite impossible to say, now, but three hours have been asked for on this side of the

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] is not now in the House, but I will agree to the request made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SULLIVAN], as I understand, has agreed to this.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is so understood. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston] is the other member of the minority of the subcommittee.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension bill.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Townsend in the chair. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations carries $137,-000,000 for the payment of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1908, as against $139,000,000 for the current year.

The total number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1906, was 985,971, as against 998,441 at the same date in the preceding

The loss in civil-war pensioners during the year was 20,543, in pensioners in all wars previous to the civil war was 1,028, making the total loss 21,571. The gain in pensioners during the year from the civil war was 6,212, from the war with Spain 2,130, and from the regular establishment 759, making a total gain of 9,102.

The net loss to the pension roll during the current year was 12,470, or 1.26 per cent.

There are now 666,453 civil-war pensioners on the rolls. Of these, 302,605 draw $10 or less per month, 557,905 $12 or less, and but 128,543 who draw over $12 per month.

The number of applications filed in 1906 was less than in any year since 1884. This would indicate that there are but com-paratively few remaining in the "unknown army" of nonpension-drawing soldiers who intend to apply.

It is interesting to note that in eight years after the close of war with Spain the Government had paid in pensions on account of that war a sum equal to 22 per cent of the total paid to the pensioners charged to the Revolution, 34 per cent of the sum paid because of the war with Mexico, and 40 per cent of the sum total paid on account of the war of 1812-14. Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman from Michigan means new applications?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. New applications, showing that what is known as the "army of nonpensioners" has nearly vanished, that there will be comparatively few additional new applications for pensions.

Another lesson may be learned from this, that down to 1870 the Navy pensioners were paid out of the Navy fund.

This year the Navy fund pays less than 9 per cent of the amount required for the men upon this line.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman, for my own information, how that Navy fund was created? I notice it amounts to something over $14,000,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Generally speaking, from the sale of prizes, but, for the gentleman's information and for the information of the House, I will embody in my answer a quotation from the statutes on this subject:

SEC. 4751. All penalties and forfeitures incurred under the provisions of sections 2461, 2462, and 2463, title, "The public lands," shall be sued for, recovered, distributed, and accounted for under the directions of the Secretary of the Navy, and shall be paid over, one half to the informers, if any, or captors, where seized, and the other half to the Secretary of the Navy for the use of the Navy pension fund; and the Secretary is authorized to mitigate, in whole or in part, on such terms and conditions as he deems proper, by an order in writing, any fine, penalty, or forfeiture so incurred.

SEC. 4752. All money accruing or which has already accrued to the United States from sale of prizes shall be and remain forever a fund for the payment of pensions to officers, seamen, and marines who may be entitled to receive the same; and if such fund be insufficient for the purpose, the public faith is pledged to make up the deficiency; but if it should be more than sufficient, the surplus shall be applied to the making of further provision for the comfort of the disabled officers, seamen, and marines.

Mr. GOULDEN I did not know. It was a stumbling block

Mr. GOULDEN. I did not know. It was a stumbling block in my way when I struck it in the committee's report.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think that is it. Here is another thought. It is to be expected that for some years there will be a steady increase of the widows added to the pension rolls from the veterans of the civil war.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will there not be a steady increase of the Spanish-American soldiers and soldiers of the Philippine war?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I was just coming to that now. It is expected also, as the gentleman from New York suggests, that there will be for years to come a steady increase of pensioners from the soldiers engaged in the war with Spain. More than that, there has been and there will continue to be a steady increase from the regular establishment. From these three sources we derive an offset in part from the reductions that come because of the deaths of the civil-war soldiers. that there will not be that marked decline in the number of pensioners upon the rolls that has been generally expected.

The only item in the bill that is likely to provoke any considerable controversy is the recommendation of the committee to appropriate for the maintenance of nine pension agencies. There are now eighteen of these. The committee do this in the belief that it will add to the economy and the efficiency of the

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman again? Will he kindly tell the committee how he arrives at the conclusion recommending certain cities and omitting others which are now regular pension agencies?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the whole matter was gone into somewhat thoroughly by the subcommittee, and after getting the information furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions we asked from him a statement as to a proposed scheme of consolidation. He presented what may be termed a "tentative arrangement"—nothing definite in the scheme offered by him or suggested by him as appears in the hearings; and yet I want to be entirely frank with the committee and say that if the consolidation takes place it will probably be along the line suggested by the Pension Commissioner in the scheme proposed. Now, why were certain cities omitted and others included? Take the city from which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goulden] comes. It so happens that there are two pension agencies in the State of New York, one in the city of New York and the other in the city of Buffalo. New York City is the only pension agency of the entire eighteen that now pays a rent. It costs the Government $4,500 a year for quarters in which to house the agency in New York City. In Buffalo there is no rent. Hence I assume that the Commissioner reasoned that we had better take the entire agency to Buffalo rather than to New York, because in the former city we have free quarters in a Government building.

Mr. DALZELL. May I. interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. If I read the report aright, the city in which I live, Pittsburg, is omitted as one of the agencies to be abolished. The pension agency in that city is in the Federal building, and the Government is not called upon to pay any

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.
Mr. BENNET of New York. We are just completing in New York City a Federal building, in which unquestionably the pension agency would be housed without paying rent, so that there is no ground for that excuse.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] I would say this, that New York, as has been stated, was eliminated in the proposed scheme because they had rent to pay. only agency housed in other than a Government building, hence if any consolidations are to be made the remaining agencies must be taken from Government buildings and put with those now in Government buildings. Pennsylvania has two agencies. Pittsburg pays in round numbers $6,000,000 a year and Philadelphia $7,000,000 a year. It has been shown that the larger agencies can be conducted with much greater economy than the small agencies are. For example, Topeka, the largest agency of the whole lot, pays 113,500 soldiers, at an average cost of 40 cents per pensioner. Augusta, one of the smallest of the agencies, pays about $3,000,000, and the exact number of pensioners there is only 17,700. It costs 73 cents a man to pay the pensioners in that agency. The average cost is 53 cents—costing 21 cents more per pensioner in the smaller agencies than in the average and 31 cents more than at the Topeka agency.

Mr. DALZELL. Why is there to be a consolidation at Phila-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Now, you ask why the consolidation in Philadelphia.

Mr. DALZELL. On the score of economy, how much would it save per man to transfer the office from Pittsburg to Phila-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In that specific instance it is very difficult to estimate, but we do know this, that between the maximum of the Augusta agency at 73 cents per pensioner and the Topeka agency at 40 cents per pensioner, these representing the two extremes, the saving is the difference between those two of nearly 50 per cent, and I may say further-and I would like to have all gentlemen note this-that there is no more complaint on the part of the soldiers who are paid from the Topeka agency than those who are paid from the Augusta or Concord agency.

Mr. SULLOWAY and several gentlemen rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I heard the gentleman from

New Hampshire first, I think.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman what the saving would be to the Government by abolishing the agency at Concord, which pays New Hampshire and Vermont soldiers? That agency is established in a Government building, and there is no rental whatever. Is it his position here that because you save 20 or 22 cents to a man that they shall wait five or six weeks to get their pensions?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not understand the gentleman from Michigan has stated in the particular instance to which I have referred that there would be any saving per man in transferring the office from Pittsburg to Philadelphia.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I beg pardon, if I interrupted the gentle-

Mr. DALZELL. You did not interrupt me, but on the score of economy I have not heard from the gentleman yet any reason why that particular transfer should be made.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Neither have I in the case I cited.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think perhaps it may be made a little clearer to the gentleman if he will note, for instance, in Philadelphia there are twenty-seven clerks

Mr. DALZELL. Philadelphia pays out $7,000,000 and Pitts-burg pays out $6,000,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In Pittsburg there are twenty-four clerks, making fifty-one clerks in those two agencies, paying about $13,000,000. There are thirty-nine clerks in Topeka, paying $16,000,000. Now, you can figure out, gentlemen, on the basis of the average, not the specific instance from Philadelphia, Pittsburg, or Concord, but the general average to-day is 53 cents.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Does it amount to anything practical in the soldier getting his pension sooner?

Mr. DALZELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this: I do not care anything about Topeka or a comparison between Topeka and Augusta. What I want to know is what saving will there be by transferring the Pittsburg agency to Philadelphia? That is the only thing I am particularly interested in at this time.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. You mean in that particular case?

Mr. DALZELL. In that particular case what will be the saving to the United States Government?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Now, the gentleman can readily see, if he has at all given consideration to the subject, that we can not figure out specifically what will be saved in that particular combination. We do know what can be saved all along the line.

Mr. DALZELL. That is exactly what I want to show, that you can not pick out any particular nine agencies of these eighteen agencies that with justice should be abolished.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes; we will come to that ter. I want to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire. He asked what is the benefit of this if it delays the soldier four or five days in getting his pension.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I said weeks; I intended to.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is it possible? Weeks! Now, gentlemen, the Commissioner of Pensions shows that any place east of the Mississippi River can be reached by mail in twenty-four hours from Washington.

Mr. OTJEN. Why not pay them all from Washington?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We will get to that shortly. Mr. SULLOWAY. Is it not his purpose to consolidate the whole shooting match at Washington and-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that we had the "shooting match" more than forty years ago. Now, if this combination takes place the consolidation for the payment of all the New England soldiers will be made in a general office. I do not speak authoritatively, but probably in the city of Boston.

Why, you can walk anywhere over in New England from Boston and get back again in less than five weeks.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I would suggest to the gentleman to come up sometime and take the exercise. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman certainly does not wish to stand on the proposition that the proposed consolidation will delay the New England soldiers four or five weeks or four or five days. It will not delay them twenty-four hours if every pensioner is paid from the city of Boston rather than from Concord, Boston, and Augusta.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentlema Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. SULLOWAY. How many in New England would be paid from the city of Boston?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In round numbers, 100,000.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Are there not more than that?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, more or less. It may be more rather than less.

Mr. GOULDEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the number is 94,229. This is from the figures given by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will it lessen the clerical force one single individual in preparing these vouchers and sending out the envelopes with checks in them?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan.

That is the belief and is in the statement made by the Commissioner. Now, this is the situation: We have in each one of the eighteen agencies a force of clerks that are rushed, say, for ten days or two weeks, and then they have comparatively nothing to do for the balance of the quarter. Now, the scheme is to give these clerks something to do for more than the comparatively short time required to pay the pensioners under the present arrangement.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If that is a fact, why do you not lessen the number of clerks? Surely a lot of fellows with nothing on hand-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I did not quite get that.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If it is a fact that you have a lot of clerks, or a number of clerks, speaking more politely, in these agencies who have nothing to do except for a few days, why do you not lessen the clerical force?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. For the very reason that the gentleman has already intimated as his objection to changing the Concord agency to Boston, that to have a smaller force of clerks would prolong the period necessary in which to give prompt deliverance of the quarterly checks to the pensioners.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Are not all the checks written out in advance and signed in advance, and ready to put in the envelopes when the vouchers arrive in proper form?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But there is a certain set of machinery

Mr. SULLOWAY. What set of machinery is required in order to draw the checks, address the envelopes, except to put the checks in them?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman suggested that. Already they are employing in the larger of these agencies addressing machines and folding machines to save help. In other words, they are doing precisely what one of you business men would do if you were conducting your own private business-using the modern labor-saving appliances-and that is what will be done.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That means a lessening of the clerks, does it not?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.
Mr. LITTAUER. Less expense as well, does it not?
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly; the expense reduced in proportion to the number of clerks cut out and agencies reduced.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What is the objection to lessening the clerical force now? That is what I want to know. If it is a fact that you have a surplus of clerks on hand.

Mr. LITTAUER. When they are subdivided they can pat be reduced.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What is the reason? Mr. LITTAUER. A force gathered together and working altogether can do the same amount of work with a less number of individuals employed than if they be scattered round about.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is nothing in that whatever. If you have got to let them have less clerical force at the agency at Concord, it is well enough to do it, and why not discharge them instead of discontinuing the agency? The same clerical force will be needed that you now have. There is no question about that. This is simply a question of consolidating these offices, bunching them, to the inconvenience of the soldiers of this country.

Mr. LITTAUER. I can not understand in what way the gentleman means they will be inconvenienced.

Mr. SULLOWAY. In delay.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York to proceed with his question.

Mr. LITTAUER. I can not appreciate this matter of delay at all. I am advised here that soldiers continue to receive their checks from Washington in some localities in Ohio and other States within thirty hours of the day in which they are due.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It may be so in certain instances.
Mr. LITTAUER. This whole proposition is a matter looking toward economy, paying less for clerk hire, by making a consolidation of the work rather than having it spread all over.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I fail to understand the economy of rent, when the agency is in a public building that pays no rant what-

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in a letter of Commissioner Warner, which treats of the question of economy raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire, there is rent of $4,500; salaries for nine pension agencies, $36,000; clerk hire, stationery, printing, and other items for clerks, $64,000, making a total saving of $104,500, as given by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is no rent for the agency at Concord. N. H.

Mr. GOULDEN. No; but the rental is at New York, which will not continue beyond a year or two, when the new custom-house will be completed.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I am not talking about New York City.

Mr. GOULDEN. Yes; but there is the saving of the salaries of the pension agents at points where the agency is abolished.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Oh, yes; there is no question about that. Mr. GOULDEN. And I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan while I am on the floor if there was no rent to be paid in New York City, would you recommend the discontinuance of that agency, when there are 10,000 more pensioners paid in New York than in the city of Buffalo?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In reply to the gentleman from New York, I will repeat my statement earlier in the discussion that this is a scheme presented, not by the committee, as you will find, but by the Commissioner of Pensions. It is simply a tentative arrangement; but I have no doubt in my mind that if New York had free quarters, as Buffalo has, the proposed agency would have been retained in New York rather than Buffalo.

Mr. GOULDEN. Ten thousand more pensioners are paid in New York than in Buffalo, and if we have no rent to pay, as suggested by my colleague from New York [Mr. Bennet], I do not see any reason why New York should have been left out of this game, as it appears to me.

Mr. LITTAUER. What game? Mr. GOULDEN. That's the way it looks to the average Member, to favor certain places at the expense of others.

Mr. WEEKS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan what the effect would be of dispensing with all pension agencies-whether the pensioner would be delayed in getting his pension, and what the saving would be in expense, if any.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that that is the ideal scheme, and one that will ultimately be come to. Every pensioner can be paid from the city of Washington, and after the receipt of his first quarterly stipend he will notice no difference from now, though he might have a pension agency within five doors of his residence.

Mr. SULLOWAY. May I ask the gentleman why? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just a moment. The interval between the receipt of his payment would be the same. Why, we have a large number of pensioners who are paid in Canada, Ireland, and Germany. They make their vouchers and send them here to Washington, and the pensions are sent to people living in these far-away countries, who receive their pensions three months from the date of the preceding one from year to year, if they are permanent residents abroad. Now, the saving will be very great if that can be done. That matter was canvassed in the committee, and it was ascertained that there are no quarters obtainable in this city now that would house the necessary pension force without renting; but the Commissioner of Pensions says that in the course of a few years there will be plenty of room in the present Pension building, where, with the clerical force and the machinery necessary, the payment of pensions in every quarter of the world could veniently be made. This is a step in that direction, and the committee feel it is better to do this now than to delay until question?

Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the committee inquire into the question whether it would be possible to have a pension agency in every Congressional district in the United States and whether that would not be more convenient to the pensioners than to have the eighteen that we now have?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I presume that men could be gotten to take pension agencies, if there was one in every Congressional district. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think that an amendment of that kind would be vastly more popular than one seeking to cut off a few officials here and there?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. From the questions, I think such an amendment as that would carry here this morning.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no pension agency in the Congressional district of the gentleman from New York [Mr.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to ask the same question that was asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts, when I interrupted the gentleman before; but I believe the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Gaedner] has not fully answered the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts. The question is, How much money would be saved if we could do away with all these pension agencies and let the payments all be made from the city of Washington?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Fully 50 per cent of the present cost, which is over half a million dollars.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman what objection could there possibly be, outside of the one that he Minnesota, and the Dakotas as its territory, the clerical force has given, to such an arrangement, by which they should all be abolished and the pensioners all paid directly from the city of Washington?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. From a business point of view there would be no objection and everything would be in its but politically there would be eighteen objections. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. If there are only eighteen objections, we ought to be able to pass such an amendment. It looks to me as though there were more than eighteen objections.

Mr. GRAHAM. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of this committee and also the attention of the House to the fact that under the statement made by the Commissioner of Pensions he shows but one rental of a pension agency to-day, that in New York. All the other pension agents are officially housed in United States Government buildings, so that there is only one place where they rent an office. By this proposition that one rental of $4,500 will be saved. Then if they abolish these pension agencies they save the salaries of nine pension agents, at $4,000 a year, or $36,000, making a total of $40,500 saved to the Government. Now, the estimate as to clerk hire is simply an estimate, that they may, under this consolidation, save a little clerk hire; but all the facts that they can produce show a saving of about $40,000, and great inconvenience and delay to tens of thousands of old soldiers, simply to save $40,000. I think the saving from reduction of clerical services can all be effected by the Department without consolidation if they desire it.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact, admitted by the people who understand most about the pension business, that they expect no delay whatever by the reduction of the number of agencies.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In the scheme proposed by the Pension Commissioner, if it should be finally settled upon between himself and the President, there will be no appreciable delay to any soldier in the country because of it.

Mr. BRICK. Now, if as proposed we reduce the number to nine and eventually reduce the whole business into one central agency for the whole United States, could not the employees be so marshaled and kept at work that there would not only be no delay to the soldiers, but that they might be paid once a month instead of once in three months?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has mentioned a very important feature of the consolidation, particularly when it comes to the consolidation of all the agencies. The clerical force here can pay once each month throughout the entire year with great economy and without any appreciable effect upon the efficiency of the service and the promptness with which the soldier receives his pension.

Mr. BRICK. And if that takes place, there will probably be a reduction of 50 per cent in the expense. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. More than that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan what prevents under the present organization of the eighteen agencies the carrying out of the recommendation of Mr. Warner of having the work distributed by the month rather than by quarters; that instead of having vouchers issued only on one certain day in each quarter for certain States and certain Territories to have them issued once a month for portions of said sections, so as to keep the clerical force employed?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, take the Concord agency; of course

Mr. STAFFORD. I would prefer to have the gentleman take the average agency. The Concord agency, the Louisville agency, the Augusta, Me., agency are the three that have less than 20,000 pensioners. Take the average agency that has above 40,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Suppose you adopt the scheme suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin. Why insist on having eighteen agencies to do that work, when there is not a man on the floor who will not state if he investigates this subject that nine agencies can do the work just as well?

Mr. STAFFORD. If you are after consolidation, we might concede that one agent could do it just as well; but it would result in quicker consolidation into one agency if all the eighteen agencies should remain as they are at present, and when the pension roll becomes so depleted that the offices are all on a par with the Concord and the Augusta, Me., offices, then there would be no need of supervising agents at the large offices as at present maintained. At the large offices, like Milwaukee and Pittsburg, that have more than 40,000 pensioners, the argument of the Pension Commissioner, so far as changing the work by months rather than by quarters, can be put into force to-day. For instance, the Milwaukee agency, which has Wisconsin, can be applied one month to Wisconsin and the next to Minnesota, and the other month to the Dakotas, and the same saving in clerical force could be made as has been suggested by the Pension Commissioner. Now, I ask the gentleman why that argument does not apply to these agencies to-day and why the Pension Commissioner can not adopt the same system in the respective agencies and still retain the present agencies?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman's position is faulty in this, that he would have the same force take care of or 6,000 pensioners in Dakota, for example, and 20,000 in Wisconsin. You have got the same force to take care of

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not necessary to have territorial boundaries. They can be distributed according to location of pensioners, so as to apportion their number equally.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I ask why the gentleman abandons his position so soon as its faultiness is pointed out to him? That is good generalship. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not abandoning my position. If too many clerks are employed in the respective agencies they can be reduced so as to have them only adequate to do the work required of them. They can divide the work into sections, rather than to have them work for one entire section at one time during the quarter. I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan another question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it is intended to reduce these agencies to nine, I suppose it is contemplated to merge the Milwaukee agency with the Chicago agency. Is that the understanding of the gentleman?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think that is in the proposed scheme by the Commissioner. But I have explained that that is not a fast and loose arrangement; it may be adjusted as later considerations and conditions shall determine. On the other hand, I think it is only fair to say that something of that kind will take place.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman considered the inadequacy of quarters in the Chicago Federal building to provide for this additional work that will be placed on the Chicago office?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman asks me individually whether I have considered that, I say "no." That is a matter of administration that comes to the Pension Commissioner and not to the Committee on Appropriations or to this House.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a fact, if the gentleman will permit me, that the Chicago Federal building to-day is overcrowded for room and could not spare any room for additional quarters, and if the Pension Bureau wanted additional quarters they would have to go outside and rent them.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true, take the Des Moines agency as contrasted with the agency at Philadelphia or Washington, that the clerks there work for one-third less than they do at Chicago or Washington, because of the cheaper living there, and that when you consolidate this work in the great cities where it is more expensive to live, you must increase the compensation and thus do away with practically all the saving that you would make by consolidation?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would say in reply to that that these clerks are all under civil service, and that they are paid substantially alike throughout the country, as I understand it.

Mr. LACEY. I understand the contrary. They are all under the civil service, but their salaries are based somewhat to meet the expense of living in the localities where they are at work. Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Lacey] is mistaken, but we can get the information as to that. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman if the committee took into consideration, so far as New York is concerned, the fact that every pensioner in New York County—in fact, in the greater city—if this agency in New York is abolished, will have to pay exchange on his checks if the checks are sent out from Buffalo. That is the fact under the clearing house rules of New York City.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I would ask the gentleman if it is not possible for the Buffalo agency to make a check upon the subtreasury in New York for every pension, so that it would be payable in New York funds?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am not advised as to that at

Mr. PAYNE. But I am asking the gentleman from Michigan. Anybody ought to be able to answer that in the affirmative.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Why, certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Anyone could answer that in the affirmative, I say. And I know that my colleague [Mr. Bennet] could. Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman from Michigan as I sav.

got very sudden light.

Mr. PAYNE. And I want to suggest further to the gentleman from Michigan that he might ask some of these gentlemen whether there is not enough patriotism among them to try and save half a million dollars for the Treasury, even though they do have to give up the little patronage there is by maintaining these eighteen agencies? That is the burning question. It is a good deal like the question before the House some time ago when we talked of getting rid of one or two ports of entry in the United States where there were no collections.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to ask my colleague if he would join with the rest of the patriots in the House in abolishing the Buffalo office?

Mr. PAYNE. I most certainly would.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Or the one at Auburn?
Mr. PAYNE. I most certainly would join in abolishing them all, and I would have them all paid from the city of Washington, and I would vote for it every day in the week if I had an opportunity

I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan what effort was made to ascertain the cost of the rental for the necessary building in the city of Washington so as to consolidate all the agencies in the one city? I ask that for information. The gentleman has told me that there would be 50 per cent saved in clerical and other expenses, and I would like to have the other question answered.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would say that within the last year the Washington agency, with which it is proposed to consolidate the Knoxville and Louisville agencies, has been housed in the Pension building. They wanted better quarters and they were in very poor quarters—that would cost, say, $4,500. The Commissioner of Pensions said to the pension agent that he could make room for them in the general Pension building, and there they are to-day, without cost and conveniently located.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, in answer to my question about what the saving would be in case all of the pension agencies were abolished I understood the gentleman from Michigan to say about $270,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. About half of the present appropriation, which is $550,000.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan, that being the case, why he does not move to abolish all pension agencies, hire a whole building in the city of Washington, if it is necessary, for, say, $20,000, and make a net saving of $250,000?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is a business man talking, and he talks just like a business man would talk at home in conducting his private affairs, and I am sorry that we do not all take the same view of it here. As I said, that is the ideal thing to do, and we hope to reach it some day. The objection is now, as urged by the Pension Commissioner, that he has not the room to do it, but would have it probably in two or three years.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

We have now in Pennsylvania two pension Mr. OLMSTED. agencies, one at Pittsburg, on the extreme west, and the other at Philadelphia, on the extreme east. I live at Harrisburg, which is in the center of the State. We have been playing both ends against the middle, so to speak. I want to ask the gentleman, now that he is going to abolish one or concentrate them, whether it would not be perhaps a good thing—and I submit this particularly to my colleagues from Pittsburg and Philadelphia-to concentrate and have the consolidated office at Harrisburg, in the middle of the State? It is a most desirable place in which to live. We have a beautiful new capitol building there, and I think the pensioners would be willing to come and get their checks personally, just to see the beautiful city and the beautiful capitol that we have there. You know Harrisburg once came very near being the national capital.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would respectfully refer the Pennsylvania delegation to the Commissioner of Pensions and the President to answer that. They will adjust the matter ultimately if the consolidation is approved by the Congress.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to proceed with the regular discussion pertaining to this bill, and I therefore suggest that until the bill is taken up under the five-minute rule we forego occupying further time in this desultory way.

Mr. Chairman, there are several gentlemen who have asked for time. I do not see the gentleman from Ohio here [Mr. GROSVENOR1

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to speak for five or ten minutes myself now.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Sullivan, who controls the time for the minority, desires to occupy a few minutes at this time.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question before he begins?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for a question.

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee, who has this matter in charge, a question, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has yielded to me to do so. question is this: You stated that in one, two, three, or four years' time there will be room in the Pension Office for the housing of the clerks who are necessary to transact the business of paying soldiers their vouchers from the city of Washington.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is anticipated.

Mr. PRINCE. Will you be kind enough to tell how the room is to be obtained?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I stated that up to comparatively recently the whole space in the Pension building has been occupied by the force that had to do with the issuing of pensions. A year ago the pension agent in this city made application to remove the quarters in which the business was carried on to more commodious and pleasanter quarters, and with good reason I may say. The Pension Commissioner ascertained that this project was on foot. He sent for the pen-sion agent in this city and said to him: "I believe we can make room for you now, for we have a less number of clerks right here in this building." It was because of the reduction of clerical force in the Pension building that the pension agency in this city was transferred to that building, and is there now. That reduction, of course, is going on continually, and within a comparatively short time there will be an abundance of room for a force sufficiently large to pay all the pensions in the present Pension building.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7270. An act to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station at Dell Rapids, S. Dak.;

S. 7147. An act to amend section 2536 of the Revised Statutes, relative to assistant appraisers at the port of New York, and further defining their powers, duties, and compensation; and

8. 7793. An act to fix the time of holding the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the northern district of Iowa.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 1050) for the relief of Edwin S. Hall.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 4423. An act providing for the donation of obsolete cannon, with their carriages and equipments, to the University of Idaho;

S. 4563. An act to prohibit corporations from making money contributions in connection with political elections; and

S. R. 86. Joint resolution granting an extension of time to certain homestead entrymen.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 24048. An act authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Fort Wright Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Spokane and Inland Empire Railroad Company, its successors and assigns.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, this proposition to consolidate the pension agencies is not a new one, and in a Congress of patriotic citizens actuated solely by a desire to save the public money it ought not to be a difficult plan to execute; but I remember some years ago hearing a distinguished Democrat upon a public platform declare what he conceived to be the difference between the Republican party and the Democratic party. He declared that Democracy was a faith and Republicanism an appetite. I think the justice of that characterization is borne out by the proceedings here this morning, for we find the war is confined to that side of the Chamber and that the prize is patronage. No man who has questioned the action of the Committee on Appropriations so far has said that the proposed consolidation would not work an economy, and no one has made the claim with any attempt to substantiate it that a single soldier who receives a pension would be delayed or hindered a single day or to the slightest degree by this proposed change. Therefore it results that the only reason for opposing it is found in the cohesive force of public plunder, and the cohesive force is exercised to-day upon that side of the Chamber. In order to show that this characterization is a just one I would like to read a little from the testimony of last year. I want to show the House that the only thing that makes for the solidarity of the Republican organization is patronage, and that that is well understood by the chief of the Republican party in the United States—I mean by the President of the United States—

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. You stated that no pensioner would be delayed a single day by reason of the consolidation of agencies. I notice on page 6 of the hearings that the Commissioner of Pensions said:

The pensioner at San Francisco might be delayed ten days or longer in getting his pension, but after that time he would get it every ninety

In other words, as I understand the Commissioner, there will be no delay simply because it takes ten days to reach him from the central agency, and that instead of getting his pension on the 4th of the month he will get it on the 14th, and the 14th will recur as regularly as the 4th. In other words, there will be a delay of ten days every payment, but that will be regular, and that delay more or less will exist all over the country.

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; the gentleman is altogether wrong, as I will proceed to point out. If he had read more, he would have reached a different conclusion, I think.

Mr. WANGER. Permit me a word more. Mr. SULLIVAN. No; pardon me; let me finish and then I will yield later.

The gentleman has been reading the statement of the Commissioner with reference to the proposition to consolidate the eighteen agencies into one, and not his statement with reference to this proposed plan of consolidation into nine agencies. If we consolidate them all into one, and have the sole agency at Washington, then the man in San Francisco would be delayed on his first payment ten days. But that is not the plan that is under consideration, I would say to the gentleman. Under this plan the agency at San Francisco will not be disturbed, and the pensioners who receive their pay from that office will not be delayed a single day. But admitting that we went further than we propose to go here to-day, and advocated the change by consolidating all agencies into one, his statement would still be substantially true-I call the gentleman's attention to that fact-for although some pensioners in some parts of the country might be delayed ten days on the first payment, they never would be delayed after that. They would receive their pension money within three months of that first payment, and they would suffer no inconvenience beyond that.

Mr. WANGER. The difference would be that while a man would be expecting his pension on the 4th of the month he would, under consolidation into one agency at a particular point, get it on the 14th-

Mr. SULLIVAN. Oh, yes.
Mr. WANGER (continuing). Instead of the 4th.
Mr. SULLIVAN. But he would continue subsequently to get it upon the 14th, and the 14th would then be his golden day instead of the 4th. He would be looking for the 14th, and would be quite as well satisfied.

Mr. WANGER. Although his certificate would tell him to get it on the 4th?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Even so, but his common sense would tell him he would get it on the 14th.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the subcommittee, what would be the saving in case it was consolidated into one agency-leaving out and excepting San Francisco—what would be the approximate saving in this matter? That goes to the meat of it. Mr. SULLIVAN. That goes to the meat of a proposition we are not discussing. That proposes a consolidation that is not before this House. We are proposing simply to cut off nine of the agencies out of the eighteen, and the one the gentleman is considering is to cut them down to one.

Mr. GOULDEN. Two.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Or two. The Commissioner of Pensions did not give us a statement of the saving effected by consolidation into one agency, but did give us a statement of the saving to be effected by the proposed consolidation into nine, and the saving would be $104,500 annually. He stated that sixty-four clerks, at $1,000 apiece, could be dropped in the several agencies which were discontinued. It would also save $36,000, which would pay the salaries of nine pension agents. We would save $4,500 a year which we are now paying as rent in New York City, temporarily.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to say that within two years they will not be paying that rent, because the new custom-house will be completed and the agency will be housed in that building?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is all very true, but within a period far less than two years we will not pay it if the proposition goes through to-day. So, if the gentleman desires economy, he can better effect it by the route proposed by the committee than by his own.

Mr. GOULDEN. We certainly want economy, but we do not want 10,000 more pensioners in New York than in Buffalo to be put to the trouble of getting their money from Buffalo.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I will call to the gentleman's attention a statement of the Pension Commissioner, who must be admitted to be qualified to judge of this matter, that if we consolidate the two agencies in New York into one, no pensioner will be delayed a single day as a result of it, and that he will not suffer the slightest inconvenience. But what I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, was that this subject is not a new one; that it was before the Committee on Appropriations one year ago, and that a motion was made, which appears by the Record of last year, to consolidate these agencies into six. That motion was based upon the statement of the Commissioner that six agencies could do the work as well as eighteen.

When the motion was considered, it was pointed out that the consolidation could be effected by Executive order and that it did not require legislation. It was suggested then that it would be better not to commit an apparent trespass upon the preroga-tives of the President by refusing to appropriate the money for the agencies, and in that manner accomplish the reduction by indirection, but would be better to consult with him and ascertain whether he would not make an order for the consolidation of these agencies, and that suggestion was acted upon. As a result one of the members of the committee called upon the President, and I read now from page 19 of last year's report a statement made to the committee by one of its members which gives the result of the conference between the President and the members of the Committee on Appropriations:

Mr. Garder of Michigan. Gentlemen, I want to say, first, in regard to the instructions of the committee last Friday, that the President was waited upon last Saturday by the Commissioner of Pensions and myself in reference to the consolidation of the pension agencies as discussed in this committee on Friday, and my impression was, and indeed he said, that he would take up the matter, but could not do it now; he was pressed too much; but later on, right after the adjournment, he would take up the matter with the Commissioner of Pensions and give to the whole subject very careful consideration, with a view of reducing the number of pension agencies.

There we have complete evidence that the matter was presented to the President by a member of the Appropriations Committee and by the Pension Commissioner, the Commissioner going very soon after making his statement to the Appropriations Committee that these agencies should be consolidated and twelve of them dropped, leaving six to administer the function. Unquestionably, although I would not have the hardihood to say what the President heard and what the President said, and to quote the conversation that was reported, I will say this: That undoubtedly the Commissioner of Pensions pressed upon the President the expediency of reducing the agencies to six. The President promised to take the matter up after the adjournment of Congress. We adjourned last July. The President had it in his power every day since last July, by Executive order, to consolidate these agencies. The President has failed to do it; and this year the Commissioner of Pensions comes before the committee once more and renews his proposition to consolidate these agencies, and he repeats his testimony of one year ago, that these agencies can be reduced to nine and even to six.

Now, then, I assert, Mr. Chairman, that the failure of the principle upon which the Republican party has maintained its organization.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I will.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts does the President an injustice. I do not like to quote on the floor of the House what the President has said or said at that time; but I will undertake the responsi-bility of saying this: That he then said substantially, "I am ready to do anything that the Commissioner of Pensions will recommend;" and I think he stands ready to do that now; but the reenforcement of an affirmative vote of this House would not only manifest to the President, but to the country, that the House is willing to forego some patronage as well as the President.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the gentleman, I think his analysis of the President's motives is entirely wrong; and I will proceed to point out wherein I think it is wrong. I will call his attention to a fact which is well known in this country, that the President does not usually wait in deference upon the Congress, but when he has fixed ideas which he likes to see crystallized into law he does not hesitate long in sending a vigorous message to Congress, and supplementing it with as many messages as he deems necessary to bring Congress to his way of thinking.

If the President were convinced, as he must have been convinced by the Commissioner of Pensions, of the necessity of effecting this economy, and he felt that it would not do violence to a sacred principle of the Republican party to effect this change himself, he would have framed an Executive order accomplishing all that the Congress could accomplish by legis-It would have been a virtuous act on the part of the President, for which he would have been entitled to the whole credit, but which now it seems he is simply asked to share with Congress. Usually, when the President can perform a meritorious act alone and without the aid of Congress, he does not hesitate to do so.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow another interruption?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I wish that politics might not be brought into this discussion, for only a purely business principle is involved; but is it not true that the last Democratic President of the United States issued an Executive order to abolish nine of these pension agencies; only in issuing the order he dated the time of its taking effect after the expiration of his term of office?

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is true, Mr. Chairman. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. So that even a Democratic President has a little idea of what patronage may be while he is in office.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is true, Mr. Chairman. idea that Republicans alone have an idea of the value of patronage. I think they could not get along without patronage as well as the Democratic party has got along. appreciate the value of it more than the Democratic party does; but let me supplement the gentleman's statement by saying that this virtuous action of a Democratic Executive in abolishing these agencies was rendered of no effect, because President McKinley canceled the order when he came into office, showing clearly that even a virtuous action of a Democratic President which might effect an economy was simply intolerable from the Republican standpoint. [Applause on Demo-

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to suggest, if the gentleman will allow me, that the distinguished President, Mr. lleveland, did not want the order to operate during his Administration, when he might have applied it, but simply wanted to teach the Republicans in the future administration how to be economical and how to restrict their patronage.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That may or may not be so, but the action of President McKinley and of President Roosevelt showed that they did not want it under any circumstances. That is the difference. Now, if President Rosevelt really thought that this economy should be effected in the interest of the taxpayers of the United States there would be no need of this discussion. He could frame an Executive order dropping these agencies to-day. He would not have to wait until this recom-mendation of the Appropriations Committee passed through this House, passed through the struggle which it must encounter here at the hands of the friends of patronage upon that side of the Chamber, and then wait and watch its devious course President to effect this saving of about $100,000, in a case brought directly to his attention, is a recognition upon his part, as head of the Republican party, that patronage is the sole country $100,000, but he prefers to have Congress do it. I ask the gentleman from Michigan, why does he prefer to have Congress do it? I will answer that question, and then the gentle-man may modify or qualify my answer or comment on it as he pleases; but my own opinion is that he chooses to put upon Congress the responsibility for reducing the opportunity for Republican patronage.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would say that I have no knowledge, direct or indirect, hearsay or otherwise, that the President has spoken, directly or by intimation, to the effect that he desires Congress to take any action upon this subject. He said to me a few days ago-I do not like to refer to private conversations with the President, but this seems to be necessary he said, "I will do what the Pension Commissioner recommends;" not what the Congress recommends, but what the Pension Commissioner recommends, and I think we ought to absolve the President of the United States from playing politics in a thing of this kind.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish that we could, but when a President is sworn to enforce laws and guard the peo-ple's money, and has the power by a single stroke of the pen to execute an economy which will save $100,000 then I assert that politics is not being played upon this end of the Avenue. If the money ought to be saved, and the President has the power to save it, why should he wait for the action of Con-Did he wait for the action of Congress when he framed Executive Order 78, concerning which there were grave doubts as to his constitutional power? There are no such doubts here. as to his constitutional power? There are no such doubts here. He has the power under the statutes to effect this economy. Last year it was a subject of debate upon this floor, and a resolution was offered to test the validity of Executive Order No. 78; but by the narrow margin of three votes this House avoided an investigation of the validity of the President's order, although the House had a Republican majority of more than I simply point to that as an illustration of the fact that there were grave doubts on both sides of the Chamber of the validity under the Constitution of the action of the President of the United States. He then exercised a doubtful power, which led to increased expenditure. He now refrains from exercising an undoubted power in the interest of economy. But we are dealing now with a question that presents no such diffi-The President's course is clear. He has the right culties. under the law to effect this economy, and in order to show that I am entirely right in criticising the President's neglect I will read again from the statement of the gentleman from Michigan made to the Appropriations Committee and printed in the RECORD. He purports to give the result of conversations be-tween the President and the Commissioner of Pensions and RECORD. himself and uses this language:

The President was waited upon Saturday by the Commissioner of Pensions and myself in reference to the consolidation of the pension agencies, as discussed in this committee on Friday. My impression was, and, indeed, he said—

Now, the gentleman undertakes to quote what the President said, and he has stated what he said in the report that he made to the committee of which he was a member-he said that he would take up the matter.

If he intended Congress to act upon it, would it be necessary to tell the gentleman that he would take up the matter? What could he have meant by using the language, "I will take up that matter" but that he, by Executive order, would effect this

If he intended not to take up the matter, he would have said to the gentleman from Michigan, "I prefer not to take the responsibility upon myself. I prefer that your committee recommend this change and the Congress accept the responsibility for this departure." But he preferred to take another attitude on the question, and he used other language indicative of that purpose. He must have said: "I will take up this matter. I have not the time now; I am pressed." He was pressed with the not the time now; I am pressed. He was pressed with the railroad-rate bill and other bills pending in this body; but after adjournment he would take up the matter with the Commissioner of Pensions and go through the whole subject, and give it careful consideration.

The President of the United States came into public notice as a reformer, a vaunted reformer of the civil service in this country. He owed whatever political fame he enjoyed in his early days to the fact that he advocated economy in the administration of public affairs, and clinging to that principle, as he is reported in the press of the country, he has gained step by step the higher offices, until now he is in the office of the President of the United States, where he has more power to effect reforms in the civil service in one minute of the day than he had years ago when he was day and night advocating these reforms; and yet, with the subject brought to his attention by a responsible officer in charge of the Bureau, with the clear statement before him that by a single stroke of the pen he could save $100,000 of the people's money, he has allowed that power to lie unused for a whole year, and then attempts to throw the responsibility of the change upon Congress. Now, I submit to the intelligent audience here if there could be any other possible interpretation of the President's motives than that? [Applause on the Demo-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the statement read from the minutes of last year is strictly accurate as I recollect that interview. There was no secretary present to take any minutes, no one but the Commissioner of Pensions and myself. Now, whether or not the Commissioner of Pensions called the President's attention to this I do not know, but it would not be a surprising thing, with the very large responsibilities, with the exacting duties and the many demands made upon the President's time, that this might have been overlooked unless his attention was especially called to it.

Again, I want to repeat what I said, that there has never been any intimation by the President, directly or indirectly, that he desired, as far as I know, to shirk any responsibility in this matter. He is not a man who shirks his duty upon another

[Applause on the Republican side.]

AN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman on person or body. [A Mr. SULLIVAN. the other side may be content with that explanation, but I shall submit this question in all candor. If the President of the United States, knowing of the necessity of this change, falled to exercise the power which he possesses, is he not clearly open to the criticism that the purpose of submitting the proposition to effect that change to Congress must be to put the responsibility for the change upon that body? Will the gentleman from Michigan tell me of any one other motive which will explain his conduct in the premises?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I do not think in a matter of this kind it is necessary to go into the motives of a man. That is pretty farfetched, and I fear the gentleman has traversed very closely to that dangerous edge. It is a dangerous thing to stand here and challenge the motives of any man, much less the President of the United States.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Ob. Mr. Chairman, there is no such thing as the crime of lèse-majesté in this free Republic, I will remind the gentleman. I am fully aware of the meaning of my words, and I accept full responsibility for them. I have no fear of criticising the motives of the President of the United States any more than I would have of criticising the motives of any other individual in the United States. I have that right in this Chamber, I submit, and if I choose to exercise it, the only limitations that shall be put upon me are that I shall do it in a courteous manner and shall not exceed the proprieties of debate and shall cling to the facts of the case. I submit that I have done all three, that I have not exceeded any of those limitations, and that I am entirely within my rights. I can not retract a single word that I have said. I repeat that there must have been a motive for the failure to act, and rather than discuss it further, because I think it has been discussed enough, I leave it to the House to decide as a matter of conscience with each Member, if he decides to make examination, whether the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Gardner] is right in his interpretation of the President's attitude or whether I am right.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DRISCOLL.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman know whether or not these agencies were created by act of Congress or by Executive order originally?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; I do not. I can not answer that question.

Mr. KEIFER. My impression is that they were never created by Congress, but were generally provided for by law and fixed by order originally—away back.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is if these economies in regard to clerk hire are possible under a consolidation of offices, why are they not possible if made without consolidation? The bulk of the saving is by the reduction of clerk hire—$64,000, estimated. Can not this reduction be just as well made by the Commissioner of Pensions without reference to a consolidation?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; I think not.
Mr. GRAHAM. I can not see why.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Oh, I think the gentleman leaves out one element in the calculation. To illustrate, take the three New England agencies, Boston, Augusta, and Concord. Two of those three agencies now pay at the same time, the same months, and one at another time. If those three agencies were made into one, the time of payment in one of them, say, for example, the Boston agency, could be changed, and then the pensioners in Maine and in New Hampshire and in Massachusetts would receive their checks at different periods from what they do now. Checks would go out to some part of that entire district each month, and the clerks, the smaller number of clerks, in the consolidated agency would be employed in certain months of each year where they are not employed now. They now send these checks out once every three months, and there does not appear to be a great deal of work for them to do in the intervals between those payments; but by consolidating three into one and making the dates of payment come each month, the clerks could be employed each month. Let me illustrate further, for a moment. Augusta, Me., pays in March, June, September, and December, and Concord pays in January, April, July, and October. That takes up eight months of the year. Boston pays as Augusta does, in March, June, September, and December. By changing the dates of the Boston payment to February, May, August, and November that agency would send out these pay checks once each month, and the clerks could be employed constantly. the same manner the same system could be applied in the other consolidated agencies throughout the country, and the clerks could be kept employed where they are now idle in these intervals of payment.

Mr. GRAHAM. I see the force of the gentleman's argument, but I can not see why it can not be accomplished in another way by having temporary clerks. Take the Pittsburg agency, for example. A certain number are employed all the year round, and then when these payments are made an additional force is called in just for a month, or so many weeks—I think it is a month that they employ them. Why could not the de-partment do the same thing in the interim, discharge a number of these clerks and just employ extra help during the time that the exigency of the case demands?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Undoubtedly the department might do that, but it is a question of making a large economy or a small the department might do economy. It would be better for the head of the department to save a dollar where he could rather than to save 50 cents, and by consolidating these agencies he would save much more than he would by appointing temporary clerks, to say nothing of the danger with which we are all familiar, that the temporary clerk soon becomes a permanent one.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to his colleague?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.
Mr. WEEKS. I would like to ask my colleague a question.
I notice in this bill an appropriation of $4,000 a year each for nine agents. I presume that is the salary paid to all agents

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.
Mr. WEEKS. There are eighteen agents, which would make $72,000. Now, if all those agencies were abolished, I would like to ask my colleague if there would not be a saving of $72,000 on that question alone?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Of $68,000, because we would get rid of seventeen of those agencies, and that brings me to a discussion of the proposition which some gentlemen have brought forward here to-day of making one agency instead of eighteen. I am not sure that some of the gentlemen have brought it forward in good faith. I think perhaps they have advanced it in order to kill the proposed consolidation into nine, knowing very well that a proposition to consolidate eighteen into one would have a slim chance of passage in this House. I doubt if it could pass this House, but I see no reason on the merits of the case we should not consolidate eighteen into one. There is a legislative difficulty, but there ought not to be any difficulty in principle. It is admitted by all who have studied the subject, notably by the Commissioner, that the pensioners throughout the country would not be delayed after the first payment if all the checks were sent out from one department in the city of Washington, and that a vast number of clerks could be dispensed with.

The only objection from the Commissioner's standpoint is that there is no building available for the housing of the clerks who would be brought here, and I, with all due respect to the Commissioner, do not think that objection has disposed of the argument in favor of consolidating into one. We are told that we could save sixty-four clerks by consolidating eighteen agencies into nine. The Commissioner's secretary being asked how many clerks we could dispense with if they consolidated into one replied that we could save the same amount. Well, that does not seem to me to follow. If we can save sixty-four by dropping nine agencies, we could save many more, if not an equal number, by dropping eight of the remaining nine agencies, and I have not the slightest doubt we could save at least a hundred thousand dollars in clerk hire and $68,000 in the salaries of pension agents by having the Department transact all the business in the city of Washington. If we had not the building, I think it would be economy to hire one temporarily and effect this saving.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman permit a question? Does the gentleman know just what was the proposition put up to the President on the question—whether to reduce from eighteen to nine or from eighteen to one?

Mr. SULLIVAN. No; I do not. Mr. DRISCOLL. You do not know but that if we do not reduce these agencies to nine the President may reduce them to Mr. SULLIVAN. I suppose the President may do it. I would be glad to have him carry his power that far.

Mr. DRISCOLL. You do not know whether the suggestion was made to the President at that time to reduce the number from eighteen to nine or from eighteen to one? Mr. SULLIVAN. I do not know, but the proposition before the committee was to consolidate into nine or six. The visit to the President was for the purpose of discussing the question of consolidation, and I do not know whether he discussed it upon the proposition to reduce it to nine or six or one, but I assume, and I do not think it is a violent assumption, that there was a discussion of the proposition to reduce it either to nine

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit me-

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes. Mr. OLMSTED. To ask if he knows what President created these 18 pension agencies?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Well, I have already stated I do not know whether they were created by order of the President or by act

Mr. OLMSTED. I will call his attention to the act of March 3, 1885, which is as follows:

The President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions whenever in his judgment the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require, but the number of pension agencies in any State or Territory shall in no case be increased hereafter to exceed three.

That is, not more than three in any one State. I read this simply to disabuse the gentleman's mind of the idea that this was for the benefit of Republican patronage. This was the last act of an expiring Republican Administration—the act was approved by a Republican President on the very last day of his term—authorizing a Democratic President, who was to be sworn in the next day, to establish these 18 pension agencies. That would benefit his own patronage, not Republican pat-

Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to correct the gentleman's impression by citing a later chapter of history, namely, that in the last Democratic Administration the Democratic President issued an order for the consolidation of the 18 agencies into 9, which order was revoked by his successor, who was a Republican President.

Mr. OLMSTED. After he had created the 18 agencies and appointed the 18 agents he desired to abolish them, so as to prevent his successor from having the same privilege.

Mr. DALZEIJL. And when he was going out he did it. Mr. SULLIVAN. His successor, not at all impressed with his act, with the principle of economy, refused to consolidate the agencies.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me? The order made by the Democratic President was made expressly to take effect after he went out of office and when the Republican President came in.

Mr. SULLIVAN. That is true; and the only criticism I would make of President Cleveland in that direction is that he seemed to possess too much faith in the virtue of a Republican Administration. [Laughter.]

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour or so much more time as he may find necessary to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it has been said in certain of the newspapers of the country that I was about to proceed to make a farewell address to the House of Representatives. I have no doubt that some of my colleagues on this side of the House and some of my friends on the other side of the House would be equally glad if that were a true statement; but it is not. I do not intend to make a farewell address now or at any other time. I do not intend by any intimation that I shall make here to bar myself from being heard during the coming month of February on any important question for the speaking upon which I may be recognized by the presiding officer. [Applause.] Nor do I intend to bar my way to any seat that I may occupy hereafter in the Senate of the United States or in any of the other great bodies, such as the Civil Service Commission. [Laughter.] Or any body of that high character.

Mr. OLMSTED. Or the Cabinet? Mr. OLCOTT. Or President?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to speak on a phase of the tariff question. It is a new question in Congress somewhat, at least in the form in which I propose to put it. I am shortly going out of public life, and I feel it my duty, wherever it is possible for me to do so, to leave behind me light-houses and buoys and trees blazed and marks upon the ground warning the people of the country against the dangers that crowd so thickly upon the people of the country situated like ours. And the particular warning that I propose to give now is to try to show that it would be recklessness and indiscretion upon the part of the people of the country to take for granted and as true any statement ple of the country to take for granted and as true any statement connected with the tariff question that might come from any Democrat or any organization of Democrats. And I propose to point out the reasons why.

Nothing which I shall say will be a reflection upon the integrity and honor and patriotic purpose of the Democratic party or its members. It is unnecessary for me to say that I have the highest regard and appreciation—I emphasize the last word—of the patience, perseverence, and continual wrongdoing of the Democratic party of my country upon this question, and I propose to apply the history of the tariff question as it has fallen under my observation as an illustration and demonstration of what I have to say.

I will not go back except to briefly state that since I have been a Member of Congress we have had the tariff question in a great many forms. We had the Morrison bill, which was a product of Democratic statesmanship, and which was supported with enthusiasm and faith and hope by the Democratis in the House and in the Senate and in the country. The author of that bill still lives, honored and esteemed by his countrymen without regard to party. I will not go into any details in regard to that measure. Subsequently there came the Mills bill, an intelligent movement in the direction of free trade, advocated by some of the ablest men on this floor at that time; and some of the arguments made at that time impressed me with great force. I remember the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Mills, the chairman of the committee, emphasizing this proposition, namely, that you must buy from foreign countries or foreign countries will not buy from you. And that was the burden of his song. It was the strongest argument put forward, and it made an impression upon my mind that more than staggered for the time being my faith in the principle of protection for protection. His idea was that trade in the productions of industry was and is a matter of sentiment and good fellowship; that unless we love the other fellow we will not buy his goods and will buy from some one who stands better in the matter of sentimentality than the other, and this regardless of the character of the goods or their prices.

This idea has much to do with many aspects of the subject of reciprocity.

Since that time I have learned to discern that there is nothing whatever in that argument, and I have reached the conclusion, which I think all intelligent men have reached, in the light of the history of the past ten or twelve years, that Nations buy where they can buy the cheapest and the best, utterly regardless of the question of the sales to any other Nation. I do not believe the fact that we manufacture all of our pig iron, or substantially all of it, has ever entered the mind of a single British merchant. Trade is selfish; commerce is pure selfishness; there is no sentiment in it, and the record of the past ten years abundantly demonstrates that fact. So that the Mills bill neither affected the condition of the country one way or the other, except that we were plodding along and doing the best that we could.

The next bill I shall speak upon is the McKinley law. That was a bill framed, not as a high protective measure, but it was framed to meet the changes in large part that had taken place by the exigencies of the shifting conditions growing out of lapse of time and the changes of commercial relations between countries. The McKinley bill had an unfortunate beginning. It began so late in the summer of the year following its introduction and passage that the country misinterpreted it and a revolution, potential and powerful at the time, swept over the country and brought us the Fifty-third Congress.

I do not care to discuss the McKinley tariff law, for the line of argument which I propose to submit is not involved in the benefit or detriment that the law inflicted on the country. It is enough to say that the Democratic Administration made haste to wipe it off the statute books, and carried the election of 1892 upon that issue and with a pledge to that course. It was a law framed for the promotion of trade among the countries of the world, and it was a law framed to meet certain of the necessities and certain of the growing and new developments of trade in this country. I might turn aside, as it is in the line of my argument, to say that from one end of the country to another there was a universal claim upon the part of the Democrats, which seemed to have its origin here in the House, and spread throughtout the country, that we could not—those were the words used—we could not produce, for instance, the article of tin plate in the United States. It was an astounding statement, and it was made with vigor and earnestness, and apparently in absolutely good faith. It was made everywhere—on the stump, in the press, and in the halls of Congress. It impressed the people with the argument.

I need not elaborate upon it that one of the greatest industries of the country and the one that is most far-reaching in its effects upon foreign commerce to-day is the manufacture of tin plate to the inhabitants of the country. I might point out the fact of the price of tin plate in the country to-day and the prices that they were at the time of the passage of the McKinley law testifies to the beneficial effect of a protective tariff in the development of an industry and the creation of competition, so that the tin plate purchased to-day in this country for the use of the people is at a price less than two-thirds of the price we were paying in those days; and we are exporting enormous quantities to foreign countries. And in this way great benefits have inured to every consumer of tin plate in this country and brought new avenues to profitable employment of tens of thousands of workingmen and their families. And alike it brought benefit to all other branches of business.

But the law was repealed and the Wilson tariff law took its place. The passage in this house was the event which brought great joy to the Democrats here and in the country and in Europe.

Now it is often said by our enemies—and said with a great deal of force and a great deal of apparent effect sometimes—that the condition of the country was not materially affected by the introduction of the Wilson tariff bill and its passage and enforcement. I am not going to spend any great amount of time upon this proposition, but I make this statement: What Democrat is there, living or dead, who ever gave any reason for the conditions of the people in this country between 1892 and 1897 that did not attribute them to the operations of the tariff law known as the "Wilson law?" If not that law, then what

Well, I will tell you what they say. They deny it. They say it had no effect; and my friend, if he will permit me, for I expect to deal with some of his arguments that have not always been made in the House of Representatives; I refer to the eloquent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I will say this, and I think I will make my argument based upon the statement of his argument. He says hard times began in 1892. That is true. But the day after election the price of labor in this country began to go down, and it went down to the condition of things we had in 1897. But he says the Wilson tariff bill was not passed until 1894, therefore how could the Wilson tariff bill have affected the country? It will not be forgotten that the Democratic party made its fight of 1892 on distinct opposition to the McKinley law and all it contained. It pledged itself to to the McKinley law and all it contained. It pledged itself to the repeal of that act, and it was not a far cry from the platform and election to the certainty of the repeal and substitution which came as the necessary outcome of the apparent popular

But the argument is this: The election of 1892 happened in The first session of the Fifty-third Congress did not begin until December, 1893. The Wilson bill did not pass and become a law until July, 1894. Hence that bill did not produce the terrible conditions in the country which began in November, 1892, and swept like a fire in dry grass all over the country and swept away a great per cent of the value of the real and personal property of the country. That is the claim, and literally that is true. But how much force is there in the admissible that is true. sion? The Democratic party is the author of the platform of 1892; it carried the country, and the result of the legislation was felt in advance and grew worse after the passage of the Wilson

But the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] Just the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] puts it this way. He gives us some very beautiful illustrations. I remember one of them. For instance, he says Napoleon had the itch at Tours—I believe I have the wrong word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Toulon.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Ah, yes; Toulon. I thank the gentle-man for the correction. Napoleon lost the battle of Waterloo. "Did the fact that he had the itch at Toulon cause the loss of the battle of Waterloo?" That is a good Democratic argument, and it is about on a dead level with the weight of Democratic arguments generally upon this particular question.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Two propositions must be borne in mind, that the downward condition of things in this country began instantly upon the election of Cleveland and a Democratic Senate and House. The burden of proof is upon the Democrats to give us an understanding of what did cause the trouble. Mr. Gompers, whom I do not often quote as an authority, says that in 1896—possibly he says in 1895—there were 3,000,000 idle men in the United States. Mr. Harrison, in the fall of 1892, said there was scarcely one, and I shall put in the RECORD an extract from his message, in which he congratulates the country upon the splendid conditions of labor and capital and industries at the close of his connection with the Government in December, 1892, when Congress assembled. No controversy was ever made about that. Nobody every contradicted the force or truthfulness or fairness of his statement.

[Fourth annual message.]

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 6, 1892.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Scnate and House of Representatives:

In submitting my annual message to Congress I have great satisfaction in being able to say that the general conditions affecting the commercial and incustrial interests of the United States are in the highest degree favorable. A comparison of the existing conditions with those of the most-favored period in the history of the country will, I believe, show that so high a degree of prosperity and so general a diffusion of the comforts of life were never before enjoyed by our people.

The total wealth of the country in 1860 was $16,159,616,068. In 1890 it amounted to $62,610,000,000, an increase of 287 per cent.

The total mileage of railways in the United States in 1860 was 30,626. In 1890 it was 167,741, an increase of 448 per cent; and it is estimated that there will be about 4,000 miles of track added by the close of the year 1892.

The official returns of the Eleventh Census and those of the Tenth Census for seventy-five leading cities furnish the basis for the following comparisons:

In 1890 the capital invested in manufacturing was $1,232,839,670. In 1890 the capital invested in manufacturing was $2,900,735,884. In 1890 the number of employees was 1,301,388.

In 1890 the number of employees was 2,251,134.

In 1890 the wages earned were $501,965,778.

In 1890 the wages earned were $51,221,170,454.

In 1880 the value of the product was $2,711,579,899.

In 1890 the value of the product was $4,860,286,837.

I am informed by the Superintendent of the Census that the omission of certain industries in 1880 which were included in 1890 accounts in part for the remarkable increase thus shown; but after making full allowance for differences of method and deducting the returns for all industries not included in the census of 1880 there remain in the reports from these seventy-five cities an increase in the capital employed of $1,522,745,604, in the value of the product of $2,024,236,166, in wages earned of $677,943,929, and in the number of wage-earners employed of $56,029. The wage earnings not only show an increased aggregate, but an increase per capita from $386 in 1880 to $547 in 1890, or 41.71 per cent.

The new industrial plants established since October 6, 1890, and up to October 22, 1892, as partially reported in the American Economist, number 345, and the extension of existing plants, 108; the new capital invested amounts to $40,449,050 and the number of additional employees to 37,285.

The Textile World for July, 1892, states that during the first six 18. The several plants can be provided in the American Economists, number 345, and the extension of existing plants, 108; the new capital invested amounts to $40,448,050 and the number of additional employees to 37,285.

The Textle evested calledar year 135 new factories were bult, of which 40 are cotton mills, 48 knitting mills, 26 woolen mills, 15 silk mills, 40 plush mills, and 2 lines mills. Of the 40 cotton mills, 21 have been built in the Southern States. Mr. A. B. Shepperson, of the New York Cotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange, estimates the number of working spindless in the Gotton Exchange and in 1892, 2,584,000 bales, an increase of 185,000 bales. From the year 1869 to 1892, inclusive, there has been an increase in the consumption of cotton in Europe of 92 per 185 to 185 to freight compared with 691,344,437 tons in 1890, an increase of 13,054,-172 tons.

Another indication of the general prosperity of the country is found in the fact that the number of depositors in savings banks increased from 693,870 in 1860 to 4,258,893 in 1890, an increase of 513 per cent, and the amount of deposits from $149,277,504 in 1860 to $1,524,844,506 in 1890, an increase of 921 per cent. In 1891 the amount of deposits in savings banks was $1,623,079,749. It is estimated that 90 per cent of these deposits represent the savings of wage-earners. The bank clearances for nine months ending September 30, 1891, amounted to $41,049,390,808. For the same months in 1892 they amounted to $45,180,601,947, an excess for the nine months of $4,140,211,139.

So I say that, driven to the necessity of admitting the good condition of the country in 1892, driven to admit the terrible condition of the country in 1896, the burden is upon the Demo-crat who justifies the changes in our legislation to show what it was that caused the changed conditions. Oh, I know what they will say. They will say there was not money enough in the I will put into my speech a statement showing the production of gold in the United States and the production of gold in all the world during the years from the beginning of Cleveland's Administration down to the present time, and you will find that the ratio by percentage of increase of the world's product of gold was greater for a number of the years of Cleveland's Administration than during the subsequent years of the Administration of McKinley. So that the whole of that argument falls absolutely to the ground. I will furnish in my speech the official statement of the Department, that will establish what I have said, although since that time I am free to admit that the increase of the gold production has been significant and important and is going on still.

1901 to 1905	320,000,000

It will be seen that in the very next year following the unfortunate election of Cleveland the increase in the world's production of gold was $11,000,000 and upward, and in the next year it reached more than $35,000,000 increase, and in the years 1895 and 1896 the increase had amounted to $54,000,000 in one year and $56,000,000 in the next, and then in the hardest of all years the gold increase had reached the enormous sum of $90,000,000. Here are facts that can not be disputed, taken from the official records of the country, which show beyond a reasonable doubt that the unusual, and it might be said unexpected, increase in the gold production of the world was powerless to even check the tide of Democratic ruin that swept over the country. The gold production in the United States in 1892 was $33,000,000. That is the year of Cleveland's election. The gold production in 1897, when we were staggering under the effects of Cleveland's Administration, had reached the enormous sum of $57,000,000, or an increase of $22,000,000, and yet its effect upon the business of the country was absolutely imperceptible. The tide of woe swept on and on and other countries absorbed the gold.

There can be no more conclusive argument in support of this proposition than the fact that with the gold production of the world and the gold production of the United States increasing at a ratio unheard of theretofore Mr. Cleveland was compelled to borrow gold from Europe to pay the running expenses of his Administration. The tremendous influx of gold during the four years of his Administration fled, fled to pay the differences in the balance of trade between the United States and the world at large; fled paralyzed by the dying industries of the United States. The increase in the gold production from that day to this has not been at so great a ratio as was the increase during the Administration of Cleveland. So the whole fable is exposed.

Our answer to the whole of this is that the quantity of money does not necessarily affect the conditions of trade and prosperity in a country. It is not the question of how much money there is in the country, it is the question of the circulation of the money in the country. And therein lies the whole distinction in these two lines of argument. So, if any gentleman shall reply to anything that I may say, let him tell us what it was that happened in 1802, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896 to prostrate the industries of the country to the terrible condition in which we found them in 1897, while gold production in the world increased from 1892 to 1897 in the great sum of $106,000,000. What was it? The burden of the proof is not upon us. Does the mere presence of a Democratic President, a Democratic House, and a Democratic Senate, without any overt act of theirs, of itself constitute a sufficient cause to prostrate the business of the country? We do not claim it, but we do claim that it was the advertised purpose of the Democratic party, under the message of Cleveland and under the letter which he wrote so early, not only to press the repeal of the McKinley law, but to inaugurate a condition that would reverse the effect of the McKinley law itself.

But the time came when the people of the country changed their views upon this subject; and a Republican President, a Republican House, and not entirely a Republican Senate came as the result of the election of 1896. But a Senate came in which, under the Administration of William McKinley and under the potential persuasion of the condition of the country, yielding to the public demand, a few Democrats aided the Republicans of the Senate, and the Dingley bill was passed.

Now, we had reached the crisis in the discussion of the tariff question, and I invite your attention to the condition that existed. The Congress that was assembled in special session in March, 1897, found this country in a condition so terrible that it would be past belief if it had not been recorded at the time. In a compilation that was made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], who has been very generous and kind in furnishing it to me, I find a statement made by a number of the governors of the Southern States, especially bewailing and bemoaning the conditions that existed at or about the time of the election of McKinley and the assembling of the Fifty-fifth Congress. I shall illustrate my speech somewhat with quotations on this subject. I do not care to read all of these numerous extracts that are compiled here.

Now, I started out by saying that the country ought not to be shocked at the prophetic utterances of men of the Democratic party. I believe there used to be a rule in the olden time somewhere that if a prophet made a mistake, if he prophesied distinctly that an event was going to happen, and it did not happen, they made some kind of a partition between his head and his body. If that had been done in this country, I fear there would have been a good many vacant seats in the House of Representatives, all on that side of the House. [Laughter.]

Now, before I proceed to these voluminous extracts, I ask

Now, before I proceed to these voluminous extracts, I ask your analysis of this proposition, as stated by the gentleman whose utterances I shall quote.

They did not tell us that they were afraid that existing conditions were going on; they did not tell us that our legislation in the Dingley bill was going to be of any benefit to the country, but they did tell us that the passage of the Dingley bill would affirmatively bring to the country a series of injurious results. It is not worth while now to say that you were prognosticating that the absence of gold, the absence of the volume of money, was going to bring trouble upon the country. You did not say that. One or two of our distinguished friends on the other side constantly cling to that idea, but the general cry was that the passage of the Dingley bill, a bill that had nothing to do with the currency, that had nothing to do with the gold or silver, but that the tariff feature of the Dingley bill, if passed, would bring affirmatively evils upon the country that they said did not exist at that time.

So you will have no room to answer me that the fact was that you wanted a larger volume of money and that a larger volume of money came; you can not put that forward as an answer, for that is not what you said, and you must stand by the record that you have made. You said expressly that if we would not pass the Dingley bill then good times would come. Then you said if we do pass the Dingley bill hard times would come, and come in these certain directions. You did not lack specifications in your bills that you filed in the court of public judgment. You said it will contract our commerce abroad; it will reduce the price of labor, and notably and conspicuously you said it will aim its heaviest blows at the farmer. These three propositions—lower wages, idle men, circumscribed foreign market and lower prices for the farmers' produce—you put foward as the evils.

Your most distinguished Democrat, and I speak of him as the most distinguished for his political misfortunes, stated in a speech that he made in New York in one of his hurried journeys there:

Wheat is only worth 65 cents a bushel, and it will never be any higher until the Democratic party is elected and these reforms are introduced.

He came to the miners in my Congressional district and said:

You are mining coal at 40 cents a ton; you do not like to do that, and you are working only two and a half or three days a week. You will never get more time or higher wages until you put the Democratic party in power.

Wheat has been ranging along in the neighborhood of a dollar a bushel, and the miners of my district have been mining coal at 80 cents a ton, working six days in the week, and seven if they want to, and that is a fair estimate of the whole of it.

Now, gentlemen, what have you to say? You say, "We will stick to our proposition that we were right then," and that is where you must stick. Now, I am going to refer to some of the great men of the Democratic party, and I want to begin with one of the most conspicuous States in this Union, and I do it now particularly because of the importance that that State has in the councils of the South and the prominence of the men of that State in the councils of the Nation. I refer to the State of Texas. We were approaching the passage of the Dinglev bill. Everybody understood that it was going to pass. It had received the indorsement of the President, it was ready to pass in the House of Representatives, and its passage was reasonably assured in the Senate. And so the time had come for the Democratic party to come forward and state what they believed the effect of it was going to be on the country, and I repeat that your statements were not that it would break up present conditions, but you did state that of its own operation it would bring to the country these divers wrongs and injuries. It was to be something that was coming in the future, something that was to grow out of the passage of the Dingley bill. We had in this House of Representatives a very distinguished gentleman from Texas, a gentleman by the name of Lanham. He spoke exactly in the same line that others spoke, and here is what he said on the 19th of July, 1897. The bill had gone to the Senate, had passed on the 4th of July, or the night before, and gone to the committee of conference and had come back from the committee of conference and was pending upon a report of that committee in the House of Representatives:

Pass your bill, reeking as it does with blood and burdens, carrying as it does disaster and distress, freighted as it is with woe and waste, filled as it is with injustice and oppression to your fellow-men; but it will but briefly blot and blur the statute books of this might nation, for it is against the genius of our institutions, the ethics of civilization, the proprieties of life, the equities of good government, and the conscience of a free people that mammon shall be enthroned and that money shall rule in this land, consecrated to liberty and to justice.

A few days ago this same very distinguished gentleman, whom we all admire, wrote a message to the house and senate of Texas, and I shall try to show you best from his declaration how little safety there is in trusting to the opinion of a Democrat upon a party question. I find his message covering nearly two pages of the Galveston News of the issue of the 11th of January, the current month. It is very ably written, and I will simply quote a paragraph under the head of "Prosperity."

In closing the quadrennium of my service as governor it gives me pleasure and patriotic pride that so much of prosperity and contentment have prevailed. The material progress, industrial development, and general improvement that have marked these four years have never been excelled nor do I think equaled in any previous like period in the history of the State.

Now, let us see what he says has happened to it, and you will see that it answers and negatives everything that he prophesies:

Our taxable values have been greatly augmented. Lands have appreciated. Labor has been rewarded. Rural communities have thriven. Agriculture and horticulture have flourished and made general advancement in abundance and diversification of crops. Our farmers as a rule are comfortable and independent. Our live-stock industries have prospered. Manufactures have multiplied. Mining has been stimulated, resources hitherto latent—

That is, they never would have been discovered but for this change, and that is my own interpolation-have been exploited and utilized. Towns have been built. Cities have grown larger. Capital has found profitable investment. Railroads have been constructed and extended. Commerce has expanded. Population has greatly increased. Six new counties have been organized. The State is exceedingly prosperous and progressing satisfactorily along all useful lines. The present is encouraging and the future is bright with premise. promise.

Now, I think that the gentleman ought to apologize to the people of the country for having misled them to such an extent as that. But he was not alone. Texas had on the floor of this House a very distinguished Member, in fact, several of them. One of them has since been a governor of the State. He made a speech here in which he prophesied more evil even than did the average Democrat. I will only read a portion of what he said and print the balance of it:

Mr. Chairman, can prosperity proceed from grievous and burdensome taxation? If so, and the pending bill should in all its provisions be crystallized into law, this country will without delay realize an abundant and universal prosperity, and all classes and conditions in society will rejoice in the change that has taken place.

That was a correct prophecy, for the governor of that great

State has rejoiced with joy unspeakable and full of glory. He continues:

But, sir, prosperity can not, will not, come by such methods. Taxation can not make wealth, nor can the want of a sufficient currency enhance the value of property or of labor. This bill is the response which the Republican party has made to popular favor as expressed at the late election. Nothing else, we are told, will be done at the present session, except to pass some such measure as this and the four general appropriation laws. The Democratic and the Populist parties can stand such a policy as this. They will be benefited by it.

Well, they have been benefited by it, and the country has, too. The Populist party has been lost and forgotten, and the Democratic party has never been in power from that day to this. He goes on:

But can the people stand it? I think not, Mr. Chairman. It will but add to the general depression throughout the country, prevent the revival of trade, and retard an advance in prices. It will add to the abundance of the few and aggravate the necessities of the many.

Here are some of the effects of the Dingley tariff bill. First, I add the statement compiled from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture for the current year of the condition of the farmers of the country. These farmers were the special object of the said forebodings of our Democratic friends, and they surely were in distress at the time these pathetic utterances were made. Never was agriculture at so low an ebb, never had lands depreciated at such a ratio, and never was prosperity so absent as it was from the farmers of the United States.

THE FARMERS ARE PROSPEROUS.

That the farmers of the country are enjoying almost unexampled prosperity is made evident in the report of Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture. Farm values computed in 1905 are greater than shown by the census of 1900 by nearly $8,000,000,000, or about 50 per cent increase. Perhaps some deduction would be made for inflation of values in certain sections of the country; otherwise this is probably a fair estimate. The total wealth produced on the farms in 1906 is estimated at $6,794,000,000, an increase of 8 per cent over 1905; this increase being in the face of a decline of $40,000,000 in the farm value of the various cereal crops. The latter, however, being much larger in volume than the 1905 crops increases the total value by $485,000,000. The following comparisons are available:

The farm still overshadows the mill and factory in providing exports, in which cotton maintains a long lead, amounting to $207,000,000 of the total of $976,000,000 of agricultural exports. The Secretary says: "It is upon the selling of a surplus in foreign countries that the farmer depends for the maintenance of profitable prices for meat animals;" but he also says that every increase of one-fourth of a cent per pound in the average price of meat raises the total yearly expense to consumers by $41,883,000. Thus it is inevitable that a larger export trade in foodstuffs, by maintaining or increasing the home price, though it may be good for the farmer, is bad for the consumer; and this accounts in part for the higher cost of living.

In conclusion, the Secretary says:

"Cotton planters are now out of their former bondage to future maintenance, and in the Middle West there has been a conversion of a million agricultural debtors paying high rates of interest into financially independent farmers, debt free and offering their savings to the banks at as small a rate of interest as 2 per cent. Farmers are using their new capital to abolish the waste places of the land and along many lines of improved production. Formerly there was an abundance of farm labor and a scarcity of farm capital. Now these conditions are reversed—labor is scarce and capital abundant."

INCREASE OF SAVINGS.

INCREASE OF SAVINGS.

It is often remarked that in these prosperous times most people are living somewhat beyond their means and apparently are making no provision for the future. But recent statistics relating to savings banks deposits show that many thousands of salaried people and wage-earners are not expending all of their money for luxuries or even for the necessaries of life. During the last ten years the number of depositors in savings banks increased from 5,065,494 to 8,027,192, or about 60 per cent, while the amount of deposits rose from $1,907,156,277 to $3,482,-137,198, or about 80 per cent. On the usual basis of five persons to each family, this means that about half the families in the United States have bank accounts averaging $433.78. Moreover, this makes no allowance for more than $690,000,000 deposited in building and loan associations by 1,600,000 individuals nor for the increase in resources of national and other banks less representative of the plain people.

Mr. Bailey, a somewhat conspicuous member of the delegation from Texas in that day and occupying a most conspicuous place to-day in the Democratic party, also expressed his views. This is an extract that has been often reproduced. It came with force and eloquence from the Democratic side, an utterance by its leader, the leader of the minority in that House. It came as a warning to the people of the country. It was on the 19th day of March, 1897, and Mr. Bailey said:

I warn you that if this bill fails, as fail it will, to bring the prosperity which the Republicans have promised, you will not live long enough to obtain a patient audience with the American people upon the absurd proposition that you can make them prosperous by increasing their taxes. You have promised to make the times better for all the people; and you must redeem that promise or be driven from the high places which you occupy. Four years of the taxation proposed in this bill will prove a severe drain upon the energies of our people and the resources of this country; but if they demonstrate, as I believe they will, the victous errors of the protection system, the lesson, though costly, will be worth its price. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am free to say to the gentleman from Maine—

And I ask you to hear this-if your revision of the tariff and your increase of taxation can bring prosperity to the country, then you are wise and patriotic; having done that, to do no more, because if that is all that is necessary it is all which ought to be done. The country gave you the power to pass laws and you have attempted to restore prosperity by increasing taxes. If you succeed the Democratic party might as well not make a nomination in the next Presidential election.

There was a prophecy thoroughly fulfilled. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He was wiser than he knew.

Mr. GROSVENOR. He spoke more wisely than he knew. He confesses that if we made prosperity or if prosperity came, which was the language, it was useless for the Democratic party to make a nomination. Prosperity did come, and yet, defiant of your leaders, you made a nomination and were whipped, and then foolishly, in my judgment, made another, and now you will get the third or fourth repetition of the same terrible vengeance of the people of the country.

If you succeed the Democratic party might as well not make a nomination. If you fail you might as well not make a nomination in the next Presidential election. Now let us give the country a chance to decide who is right and who is wrong. You have applied your remedy. I am confident it will fail. I am so confident of its failure that I want to raise no other issue. I want the country to decide between your wisdom and ours upon the measures which you have already proposed. Let the country say whether it is tariff revision or financial reform which shall work out our redemption.

Mr. Bailey again-and I will quote what he said-elaborates the same ideas in a further speech which he made on the 3d day of May, when the bill was still pending in the House:

When the people voted the Republican party into power they intended that party to apply its principles. I believe they made a mistake, but I have confidence enough in their intelligence they will discover that mistake and rectify it. Let the Republican party meet its responsibility, and let us provide it with no explanations for its failure. * * That is the supreme issue—prosperity. If you bring it, the country will credit you for your good service. If you fail to bring it, the country will dismiss you from its service. If you demonstrate, as demonstrate you will, that a high tariff under a goid standard will not bring prosperity, I will stake my political fortune on the proposition that the American people will then yote to restore bimetallism as the only means of restoring prosperity to this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I do not want to pile up all the honors upon Texas. have one or two other extracts which, with the leave of the House, I will publish; but I want to come to another distinguished gentleman who has done me the honor to come within hearing distance of my few remarks and to show you not only the Democratic leader of the House at that day but the very able and distinguished leader of the minority of the House at this day was as much at fault as was his distinguished leader. Here is what Mr. WILLIAMS said. He always says it with such an assurance of its truth and its accuracy that I have to go out and walk up and down in the lobby sometimes to shake off the effect of his utterance and get back to reason and common sense. [Laughter and applause.] December, 1889, the gentleman had discovered exactly what had followed in this country, and he shifted the position of the Democratic party in a very adroit sentence or two. This is what he said on December 15, page 466 of the Congressional Record of that Congress:

Mr. Chairman, answering for myself, I stand here to say that I have never yet made a public utterance by which I would not abide, because the utterance has always been not only the conviction of my constituents, but my own. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I thought he said "conscience," but he said "constituents."

And had I the power now, standing here as I do, if I were the czar of America and had unlimited power, I would to-morrow open the mints to the free coinage of silver at the rate of 16 to 1 with but one doubt in my mind, and that doubt would be whether it were not better to go to the world's ratio of 15½ to 1.

Mr. DALZELL The gentleman still thinks silver ought to be coined at the mint at the ratio of 16 to 1?

Mr. BAILEY of Texas. I do.

It does not appear the gentleman from Mississippi answered that question.

But there is another great State in the Union, and its representation upon this floor is always able and conspicuous. want to show you how all phases of Democracy on that side of the House concurred in these prophetic declarations. There was then on the floor of this House a gentleman by the name of CHAMP CLARK, of Missouri, who has been here ever since, and I hope he may stay here until he becomes the last vestige of the Democracy in this country [laughter on the Republican side], for he is an outspoken, brave, and generally wrongheaded statesman. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] This was uttered on the 20th day of March, 1897. That was when the Dingley bill was pending. It had gotten under way pretty rapidly. It had been made, as you all know, practically during the winter months of December, January, and February, and finished in March.

It was not made in a committee room of this Capitol. It was made in a couple of committee rooms in a hotel uptown. It was not made with the presence of the members of the Demo-cratic Ways and Means Committee, but it was made as a Re-publican measure by the remaining members of the Republican part of the Ways and Means Committee. I will read:

The Republican party have always been very long on promises and very short on performances. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] You told them [the people] that as soon as McKinley was elected a tide of prosperity was going to roll over the land that would come up to the very chins of the people. [Laughter.] Where is that tide of prosperity now? It seems to have gotten stunted somehow, belated somewhere. It is merely a case of "arrested development." [Laughter and applause.] Prosperity is coming, is it? You are bringing it now, are you? Let me tell you about it.

And then see how the poet breaks forth:

Republican prosperity is-

Like popples spread,
You seize the flower, its bloom is shed;
Or, like the snowfall in the river,
A moment white, then melts forever;
Or, like the borealis race,
That flits ere you can point the place;
Or, like the rainbow's lovely form,
Evanishing amid the storm.

But my friend Clark had something else to say, passing over the declaration of Mr. Cockran on the 31st day of March, the day that the McKinley bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Ways and Means. He said:

repeat, so that all men may hear-

I do not like to read this, and if I had not entered upon it I would not have done so. The gentleman has a right to have me say in advance that he will repudiate this declaration under all circumstances, and was probably driven to it by the annoyance of some wicked Republican-

I repeat, so that all men may hear, that I am a free trader, and take my stand with Sir Robert Peel, Richard Cobden, John Bright, and Henry George. I may be an humble member of that illustrious company, but it is better to be a doorkeeper in the house of honest free traders than to dwell in the tents of wicked protectionists.

Then on the same day:

A beastly majority in 1896, secured by means forbidden in morals and dangerous to our institutions, hath made you Republicans mad.

But you will be brought to your senses when the people again get a shot at you in the year of our Lord and Master 1896.

They have had several shots since, and we are doing pretty well, thank you. How do you find yourself? [Laughter.]

Then you will be in the condition of the man out of whom the devil was cast, and after his soul was swept and garnished, the devil returned, bringing with him seven other devils. The Bible says that the last state of that man was worse than the first.

By the eye of faith I can see a million bicyclers, with pneumatic tires, riding down protection and liars [laughter and applause]—

Broke out again with his poetic tendency because you are putting up the price of bicycles 35 per cent.

The women of the land—God bless 'em—will make their husbands, sons, brothers, and sweethearts vote against you, because under the Dingley bill they can only have one dress where they had two under the Wilson-Gorman bill. [Laughter.]

Seven million farmers will dig you up with their hoes—

Listen to this. This is one of the finest things in the English language plow you up with their plows, beat you with their mauls, hackle you with their harrows, hammer you with their sledges, rake you with their currycombs, pulverize you with their disks, cut you down with their axes, split you to pieces with the froes, ride you on their barbed-wire fences, toss you on their pitchforks—

I did not think the Senator-but I must not do that smite you with their pile drivers, grind you through their sausage mills [laughter], mow you down with their reapers, bind you up in great bundles, run you through their thrashing machines, and scatter you as worthless chaff, because you are raising the price of all farming implements by 45 per cent. [Laughter and applause.]

I must stop here and give you an illustration under that subject, and it applies to the whole of this outcry about farmers. Not many years ago a farmer in the State of Nebraska went to the town where he was in the habit of trading and sought to buy a buggy, and having selected a very cheap one he asked the dealer the price of it. The dealer said it was $62. The man said:

Well, this buggy I want to buy is the same sort of buggy exactly that you sold me some years ago for $55.

The dealer said:

I will go and consult the books and see what that trade was.

He went and examined his books, and he came back and said:

Yes, I sold you that for $55; but you didn't have any money, and you brought me in 500 bushels of corn and paid for the buggy at 11 cents a bushel. Now, I will sell you this buggy for $62; and if you will go and bring me 500 bushels of corn I will give you this buggy and a self-binder at $125, a sulky plow at $35, a small plow for $12, and I will give you $16 in cash.

[Laughter.]

That is a fair illustration, and I give it as a fair illustration of the situation throughout the country.

But Mr. Clark went on:

Every patient forced to endure a surgical operation will loathe you because you have increased the tax on anæsthetics. Every lover of learning will detest you because you have laid a prohibitive tariff on books, thereby shutting the gates of knowledge so far as was in your power. Every child that dies of diphtheria will pass away pronouncing on you its lasting curse because you have put up the price of antitoxin. You are arraying against you every right-thinking man and woman in the land.

There must be a large majority of wrong-thinking men and women in this country. [Laughter.]

Since he, miscalled the Morning Star, Nor man nor fiend hath fallen so far-as you will fall when the people of the United States find out the numerous monstrosities contained in this bill.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

That was the Dingley bill.

Then said Mr. Clark nine days afterwards. When I heard him make that utterance I said to myself he has straightened up and has come back to his sober senses. I do not use the word "sober" in any other relation than a proper one:

Mr. Clark. [March 31, 1897.] Mr. Chairman, after nine days of sore travall, at least one truth has been brought forth on the Republican side of this House, and that by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Linney], when he said that I would destroy every custom-house in

I am not going to read that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You can go on and read it all you want to.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing):

Mr. Clark. [May 6, 1897.] McKinley prosperity is a myth. It is always over the divide—in the next county—on the other side of the hill. If we live till McKinley prosperity comes, we will all double discount Methuselah in length of days.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Then comes Mr. De Armond and Mr. Dockery. Mr. DE Armond is present, and I may venture to quote what he said about the effect of the Dingley bill.

He said:

Mr. De Armond. [July 24, 1897.] We will meet you at every crossroads; we will defy you upon every stump; we will strip bare your skeletons; we will show that your tariff bill just passed, about which you boast so much—the bill that is to herald in prosperity for the few and adversity for the many—is the most iniquitous, the most villainous, the most oppressive tariff bill ever made.

Mr. De Armond [March 25, 1897]. What is there in your legislation for the tollers of the land? What is there in your bill to give work and wages to the idle or to add to the price of the products of the farm or plantation? What is there to lessen the outlay which must be made, or to increase the income which must be secured, in order to meet the requirements of civilized existence? What is there to rise the price of corn and wheat and cattle and cotton? * * You may give some prosperity—I do not know whether you will or not—you may give some prosperity to favored spots in New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, to that favored region which lies east of the Alleghenies and north of the Potomac. You may do it; I do not know. But you will only do that temporarily, if at all. Yours will be but a fitful gleam of prosperity until something is done which will bring relief to the West and to the South; until something is done which will bring prosperity to the country in general without wrong to any class, without hardship upon any, without partiality toward any. Your measure will not do that. * * And when the appeal is made to the American people; when those who are deluded see how hollow, how empty is this claim that through tariff legislation such as you propose prosperity can be brought to them; when want presses down closer and harder upon them; when the scarcity of money becomes daily and hourly more apparent and the suffering from it more intense—then will come up from that mighty unpurchased and unpurchasable host such an answer as will echo around the world and be embodied in the statutes of our country. * * * When prosperity returns to the country, as I hope it soon may, when there are changed political conditions prevailing in this land—and I do not look for the return of prosperity earlier—when prosperity comes, it will not start from the already inordinately protected manufacturer of the East. * * * I look to the West and South for the signs of returning prosperity, that real prosperity which will not come until, through the righteous indignation of an outraged and long-suffering people, you who scorn economy, who revel in high taxation, riot in extravagance, and fatten in the money famine, shall be driven from power, and the friends of the people shall take your places. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Then Mr. Clark came into the discussion of that day with one choice contribution.

Mr. Clark [March 30, 1897]. We may be "fools" and "leather-heads" and all that sort of thing, but I tell you, gentlemen, the people living west of the Allegheny Mountains and south of the Potomac have sense enough to know when they are sandbagged and held up.

These declarations of the two distinguished gentlemen from Missouri exhibit to the reader the effect that this Republican legislation has had upon the farmers of the country.

By all this it is easy to see what wondrous effect the Dingley bill had upon the country.

To show the steady growth of the business of the country I publish another table showing the imports and exports of merchandise by months for the years 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, followed by a summary of each twelve-month period ending June 30 from 1895 to 1905, showing the tremendous growth of our imports and exports of merchandise, not alone the products of the country.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I might go on for a long period of time citing utterances of Democratic statesmen, Mr. Little, of Arkansas, Mr. Robinson, of Indiana. I am sure they will be glad to see these choice extracts reproduced. There are quite a good many of them, all in the same line. Mr. Brundidge, of Arkansas, said on the 24th of March:

They-

have already in the past few years witnessed the depreciation in value of their homes, their farms, and every vestige of property that they own.

That was under the Wilson bill. He was right about that, they had.

The products of their farms and shops, etc. Death sentence of the Republican party.

We filed a petition in error, getting a reversal of the judgment, and here we are. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

And in four short years, I believe in two, they will rise up and by an uncorrupted and uncoerced ballot they will say to you, in the language of that greatest of all books, "You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. This year thou shalt die." [Laughter.]

Who was that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That was the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Brunddee]. Now, I should not like to discriminate against any gentleman [laughter], and yet I will not weary the House much longer with a continuation of these extracts. Inasmuch as the great Democratic Representative on the Committee on Appropriations, my time-honored and much-esteemed friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston], still holds out to burn [laughter], I will read what he says. He is a calm, deliberate man, always careful to go no step beyond the point where his convictions drive him. This was on the 24th of March. It puts me in mind of an old-time Methodist love feast. The handwriting was on the wall. The bill was to pass, and they all got up and said, in language of the old time, "I rise to say;" and then the few utterances were delivered. Now, the gentlemen from Georgia, and I include Mr. Livingston, Mr. Tate, and Mr. Adamson, on that occasion said:

Tate, and Mr. Adamson, on that occasion said:

Mr. Tate. [March 24, 1897.] When the sturdy farmers of this country, who are to-day plowing their fields, * * fully understand the provisions of this bill, they will justly repudiate those who seek, at the dictation of the protected classes, to fasten this unjust legislation upon the country. [Applause.] Sir, the people of this country will not have prosperity until we restore the money of our fathers.

Mr. Adamson. [March 23, 1897.] A country which can withstand the ravages of the Republican party for thirty years may reasonably hope to survive all possible calamities, political or elemental, wars, pestilence, or famine, and live to rejoice in prosperity, power, and freedom when the sectional party of corporations, trusts, and corruption shall have fallen to rise no more. [Applause.]

Mr. Livingston. [March 24, 1897.] Some one stated on the floor yesterday that if the South and West wanted their industries encouraged we must vote the Republican industries. The departure, however, is a bold and open declaration that this tariff bill has a double purpose—raising revenues and encouraging industries—but, unfortunately, for agricultural industries South and North this bill brings no relief, but, instead, increases burdens. * * Trusting to a conservative, sensible, honest, and interested people, who will have a chance at those who are responsible for this measure in 1898, and believing firmly that the verdict rendered then will be "Not well done, unfaithful servants; retire and give place to those who will ever carefor and legislate for the whole people, without regard to party or section."

Mr. Bartlett. [March 29, 1897.] When we shall return to the doctrines of the founders of this Government; when we shall economically

Mr. Bartlett. [March 29, 1897.] When we shall return to the doctrines of the founders of this Government; when we shall economically administer the Government; when the lawmaking power shall remember that the agricultural interest of our country is essentially connected with every other and is superior in importance to them all; that as the business of manufacture and commerce tend to increase the value of agricultural products and to extend their application to the wants and comforts of society they deserve the fostering care of the Government; when all classes and all sections of this country shall be alike regarded; when laws are passed that affect all alike, that lay the burdens of government equally, and grant special privileges to none; when the farmer and the producer shall have a sufficient and just return for their products and their labor, then we may expect a return of prosperity, and not before.

Following this, for the benefit of the gentlemen who are worried about the laborers, I append the average rate per hour of common laborers in the United States in fifteen specified industries in 1905, compared with wages in the same industries from 1892 to 1896. These figures are from the official records of the country.

Showing that the very spots in the line which they assaulted are the ones where the very strength of that legislation has

But Virginia wheeled into line, and on the 23d of March Mr. Swanson, now governor of that Commonwealth, said:

Each of these recurring years-

That is, the past four years-

That is, the past four years—has brought times harder than the preceding; each brought greater business depression, greater fall in prices, greater poverty. Increasing debt and distress have come along with increased industry and frugality. People's wees have grown despite the largest agricultural crops ever produced. In less than four years, in time of profound peace, with bountiful crops and harvests, two extraordinary sessions of Congress have been called to furnish measures of relief to a suffering people. The Wilson bill has been a detriment and not a benefit. The curse of the country has been the gold standard and not reduced tariff taxes. The passage of this bill means to destroy this vast foreign trade which is fast increasing each year.

Foreign trade to day is double what it was at that time.

Foreign trade to-day is double what it was at that time.

It means on our part a policy of isolation instead of one of progress and enterprise. The decreased importation of foreign goods under the Wilson bill also shows that the manufacturer under a low revenue tariff is better able to control the home markets. The manufacturer is suffering, as everybody else is suffering, not from lower tariff taxes, for this has been beneficial, but on account of falling prices resulting from the appreciation of money, which the existence of the gold standard has produced. There can be no return of prosperity to the furnaces and mills, as there can be none to the farmers, until there is a restoration of prices. The demand for gold can only be lessened by creating a demand for silver equal with gold, which will occur when we give silver equal rights in money. When this is done then the price of the products of the farm, of the furnace, of the mill will return to what they were formerly; and then, and not until then, will the restoration of prosperity and good times come.

To cheer up the friends of ours who predicted the loss of our foreign trade, the following is printed here:

INCREASE IN FOREIGN TRADE—BUREAU OF STATISTICS SHOWS GAIN OF $312,821,848 IN 1906—EXPORTS COVER $171,257,148 AND IMPORTS $141,564,700 OF THE ADDED BUSINESS OF THE YEAR.

$141,564,700 of the Added business of the Year.

The total value of the foreign trade of the United States in the calendar year 1906 was $3,118,857,193, according to a bulletin issued by the Bureau of Statistics. This was an increase of $312,821,848 over the total for the preceding year, of which $171,257,148 was in exports and $141,564,700 in imports. Manufactured articles imported exceeded those of the previous year by $57,623,296, while articles partly manufactured increased $53,244,462, and crude materials for manufacturing increased $43,361,066.

The exports of manufactured articles show a comparative increase of $50,251,469 and partly manufactured $35,788,858, while foodstuffs, crude and manufactured, agained $50,430,961.

The statistics under the different classifications and the increase or decrease, compared with the previous year, are:

IMPORTS.

Foodstuffs, $278,638,209; decrease, $14,662,450. Crude materials, $447,938,822; increase, $43,361,066. Partly manufactured, $249,535,019; increase, $53,244,462. Manufactures, $33,4810,699; increase, $57,623,296. Miscellaneous, $9,686,411; increase, $1,898,335. Total, $1,320,609,250; increase, $141,564,700.

EXPORTS

Foodstuffs, $521,312,722; increase, $50,430,961. Crude materials, $524,902,516; increase, $44,773,121. Partly manufactured, $248,897,752; increase, $35,788,858. Manufactures, $470,033,393; increase, $50,251,469. Miscellaneous and reexports, $33,101,560; increase, $22,737. Total, $1,798,247,948; increase, $171,257,148.

And again, a little differently stated, and it will be seen that our manufactured goods-

EXPORTS TOUCH NEW RECORD—UNITED STATES SENDS OUT ENORMOUS LOT OF MANUFACTURES—DURING YEAR JUST ENDED INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS AMOUNTED TO $700,000,000.

EUSINESS AMOUNTED TO $700,000,000.

Exports of manufactures from the United States in the year just ended aggregated more than $700,000,000. Ten years ago, in the fiscal year 1896, they amounted to but $258,000,000. In 1886, but $145,000,000, and in 1876, $105,000,000. The share which manufactures formed of the total exports was 42 per cent, this being three and one-half times as great as a decade ago.

This is the first time that exports of manufactures have ever approximated the $700,000,000 line. Even in the fiscal year 1906, which is only six months away, the total exports of manufactures were but $686,000,000. Thus these exports in the calendar year just closed are actually twice as great in value as in the fiscal year 1898.

The United States now holds third rank among nations as an exporter of manufactures. The total exports from the United Kingdom in 1905 were $1,333,000,000, and from Germany $910,000,000.

KENTUCKY.

Kentucky, the "bluegrass" State, comes next, and the utterance of her able and experienced son is useful to show the horrors that had defied the natural advantages of Kentucky and had prostrated the industrial classes of her people in the slough of despondency.

of despondency.

Mr. Smith. [March 31, 1897.] But it is claimed by its friends that this measure, when put into operation, will revolutionize the prevalent depressed state of business affairs, that in some mysterious and inexplicable manner it will supply all the arteries of commercial life with a richer and more abundant blood and vivify and regenerate the dead and languishing industries of the country. In the providence of God I trust it will, but in the weakness of my mental perception I am unable to see how and why it will be competent to bring the blessings prophesied of it. If I could be made to see that it would fulfill the apparent expectations of its advocates, I would go quickly to its support, and so far as my effort could achieve it, would hasten the day and the hour when my country would enjoy the fruition of the wise and faithful service that led to its adoption. * * * Stagnation and depression rule with despotic sway in every department of business life. Able, enterprising, and cautious men have been swept into the vortex of hopeless and irretrievable insolvency.

Want and penury are visible in the faces of countless thousands who wender up and down the streets of the great metropolitan cities in search of employment that can not be had at any price, and in numberless homes, erstwhile radiant with the glow of success and contentment, there are now the somber hues of discontentment and destitution. The bounteous crops of the farmers, the bone and sinew of the Republic, instead of smiling with the gentle assurances of fair reward to them who have through sunshine and shower nurtured and developed them, are now heaving with sighs of disappointment and vocal with the moans of despair, and, in short, the deepening shadows of a long-continued but ever more furious financial storm still hover over and around the great masses of our population. It is as impossible to reinstate the former level of prices by the enactment of this measure as it is to enter the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem by the commis

Not one statement of the existing conditions was an exaggeration. Not one prophecy was fulfilled. Not one warning but failed of performance, and the whole extract aptly illustrates the phrensy of fear that seized upon our Democratic friends.

And now Tennessee:

Mr. Bate [July 6, 1897]. There comes on the wind from every section of the country the wail of an impoverished people. They demand relief, but they get increased taxation; they ask for bread, and you give them a stone; you mock at their distress and laugh at their suffering with this bill of increased taxes. * * Prosperity can not be assured by any law the repeal of which will be the urgent necessity for the great body of taxpayers. * * * I stand here, Mr. President, the advocate of fair trade and free silver. * * * By no other combination of revenue and currency can the great object of relief to the people be accomplished. * * * We can not burden the sale of foreign goods without embarrassing the sale of American products, and this bill, which is to make us the Ishmael among nations, will, I fear, intensify the distress and depression that already exist in every agricultural part of the Union.

bination of revenue and currency can the great of the relation goods without embarrassing the sale of American products, and this bill, which is to make us the Ishmael among nations, will, I fear, intensify the distress and depression that already exist in every agricultural part of the Union.

Mr. McMillix [March 24, 1897]. Mr. Chairman, of all the futile efforts to delude that I have ever seen this is the most glaring. A large per cent of our population is farmers. They are the ones who bear the burdens and get no benefits. * * * Ruin is abroad in the land, and it is not confined to any particular vocation. The bank doors are closing and bank presidents are going to Canada and the penitertiary, * * * Out in the West the bins and reservoirs of industry are bursting with the wheat and corn for which there is no market * * * What have they proposed for the farmers? To tax them more. * * * Mr. Chairman, after a careful and painstaking examination of this bill, I do not hesitate to declare it the most unconscionable effort at legislative robbery ever attempted upon a people. Neither the great fire of Chicago nor of Boston, nor the fearful flood that now devastates the Southland, could begin to compare with it as a calamity.

Mr. Gaines [July 19, 1897]. Mr. Speaker, I arraign the Republican party at the bar of public opinion upon indictment preferred by an outraged people, and charge it with the foul murder of the agricultural interests of this country. * * In sustaining this indictment for the foul assassination of the farming interests of the country, I am not called upon to prove the corpus delicit, for the corpse lies stretched and mangled before the jury. * * I call upon the Republican party to answer for the desolation and penury that obtain in rural homes in this fair land where once was plenty and contentment; and in the name of this people, who constitute the bone and blood and brain of the country, I demand that legislation in this Chamber be directed in their behalf. * * * The toilers at the plow handles

We have stood the storm and have emerged under the gentle voice of the Dingley bill—"peace, be still"—and the waves of Democratic horrors have subsided and the great State of Tennessee, is to-day enjoying a condition of prosperity she never had before

Hear now from the grand old mother of Presidents-Virginia:

Hear now from the grand old mother of Presidents—Virginia:

Mr. Swanson [March 23, 1897]. * * * Each of these recurring years has brought times harder than the preceding; each brought greater business depression, greater fall in prices, greater poverty. Increasing debt and distress have come along with increased industry and frugality. The people's woes have grown despite the largest agricultural crops ever produced. * * In less than four years, in time of profound peace, with bountiful crops and harvests, two extraordinary sessions of Congress have been called to furnish measures of relief to a suffering people. * * * The Wilson bill has been a benefit and not a detriment. The curse of the country has been the gold standard, and not reduced tariff taxes. * * * The passage of this bill means to destroy this vast (foreign) trade, which is fast increasing each year. It means an abandonment by the United States of the markets of the world. It means on our part a policy of isolation instead of one of progress and enterprise. * * * The decreased importation of foreign goods under the Wilson bill also shows that the manufacturer, under a low revenue tariff, is better able to control the home market. * * The manufacturer is suffering, as everybody else has suffered, not from lower tariff taxes, for this has been beneficial, but on account of falling prices resulting from the appreciation of money which the existence of the gold standard has produced. * * There can be no return of prosperity to the furnaces and mills, as there can be none to the farmers, until there is a restoration of prices. The demand (for gold) can only be lessened by creating a demand for silver equal with gold, which will occur when we give silver equal rights as money. When this is done, then the price of the products of the farm, of the furnace, of the mill, will return to what they were formerly; and then, and not until then, will the restoration of prosperity and good times come. This is our view on this side of the Chamber, and no other view

And now comes the growing and now prosperous State of Arkansas, and testifies to the horrors of Democratic control:

Mr. Little [March 24, 1897]. The farmer has long since learned that whether there is a high tariff or low tariff, or no tariff at all, the value of everything he raises to sell and all his property, including his lands, have continued to decrease in value for the last twenty years, and the only effect the tariff tax can have upon him is to increase his burdens. The last campaign, Mr. Chairman, was made not upon the tariff issue, but upon the money question. * * There were 6,500,000 unpurchasable freemen who cast patriotic ballots for William Jennings Bryan, their Constitution, and their country. * * *

With prosperity restored to the agricultural and industrial classes of the people, to whom you must look for a market for the product of your factories, you could rekindle your furnaces and give constant employment to your laborers; but as long as want and distress pervade this great body of consumers of your products you may start your factories, but you will be compelled to again close them, because your consumers are not able to buy. Abandon this short-sighted and rulnous policy and join us in our efforts to resore a policy of justice and equality toward all the people.

Mr. DINSMORE (March 30, 1897). You will be judged by the merits of this bill. You will be held responsible by the American people for this bill when it becomes a law. I am no prophet; I do not desire to indulge in prophecy; I never do so. But I do claim the privilege of saying in behalf of the people I have the honor to represent that in my judgment this bill is going to be a failure, and will not bring to the people the prosperity you have promised.

* * The Republican party has yet to learn, it seems, that all prosperity in this country depends upon successful agriculture, and unless the farmer prospers he has not the wherewithal to buy the manufacturer's product. All depends upon the farmer, practically all, and yet he is the one ignored.

* * There will never be international agreement, but there will be bimetalism in the country; there will be free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver, and then there will be prosperity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BRUNDIDGE [March 24, 1897]. They-

His constituents-

have already in the past few years witnessed the depreciation in value of their homes, their farms, and every vestige of property that they own. * * The products of their farms and shops are not worth in the market the cost of production, their children, in many instances, have been forced from the schoolroom to the fields, and upon every hand can be heard murmurings of hard and distressing times. And, Mr. Chairman, this condition exists over a broader area of the South and West than most people are willing to admit; but it is their privilege and duty through their Representatives in this House to resent as unwarranted and denounce as a crime the present effort to still further exact and wring from them the fruits of their labor. * * Let the wolf no longer conceal his identity. Unmask the robber in order that the people of this country may know by what means the poor are to be made poorer and the rich richer. * * There is but one industry that will be materially benefited. You will fill the land again with idlers; you will drive them to strong drink; you will increase the consumption of whisky, and fill our poorhouses with paupers and our saylums with maniacs. You may damn their souls, but upon your shoulders must rest the awful consequences of such legislation. * * And you may pass this bill, as pass it you will, entailing its additional and manifold burdens and hardships upon this country. But I warn you that soon a day of reckoning will come. An unseen but mighty hand is to-day writing upon the hearts of the American people the great death sentence of the Republican party, and in four short years—I believe in two—they will rise up and by an uncorrupted and uncorrected ballot they will say to you in the language of that greatest of all books: "You have been weighed in the balance and found wanting; this year thou shalt die."

Yet we live! The prophecy that the Dingley bill would drive the people to drink is not sustained, and yet doubtless the conditions existing at the time the gentleman spoke may have made it easier for some men to gratify their bibulous tendencies.

INDIANA.

The Hoosier State now testifies:

The Hoosier State now testifies:

Mr. Robinson [July 19, 1897]. Mr. Speaker, this is a fitting time indeed—at the dead hour of the night—to pass this bill that covers with a blanket mortgage in favor of wealth the future profits of honest toil.

* * * During the campaign the majority on that side said that the depression was not the result of industrial conditions, but the fruit of a lack of confidence; that business stood ready to embark as soon as the discussion was over and the President elected.

* * * The President was elected, but the clusive goddess was nowhere to be seen. Then it was said: "Give the Administration a chance. The President has not yet been inaugurated; when he is, all will be well." The event over, the hand of depression grew still heavier upon us. Then they said: "Wait till the tariff bill is passed." And now, as we stand on the threshold of this false mansion of manifold calamities and false promises, our ears are disturbed to frenzy by the wails of more starving miners striking for bread, industrial depression deeper and more disastrous, bankruptcy, and battle for existence all over the land.

* * * Sir, they have played upon the soft lute of hope so long that patience has ceased to be a virtue, and the imprisoned spirit of a long-suffering and deluded people clearly sees the hypocrisy of their pretensions.

Mr. Miers [March 25, 1897.] I have the honor to represent one of the best agricultural districts in the State of Indiana. Business there is so depressed that tenants and even owners of large farms, that will yield as much corn, wheat, or oats per acre as any land in the United States and can be produced with as little labor and expense, can not afford to raise the products of the farm and put them on the market.

* * This is true of the very best farmers all over Indiana and of the great West. Our people want relief, and want it quickly and need it badly.

* * Our competitors have enjoyed a protective bounty equivalent to the premium on gold as measured by silver to disappear.

Here again is an admission of the bad conditions in which we found the country in 1893. Contrast this admitted condition with the present, when the farmer is growing richer than he ever dreamed of being in the good old Democratic days.

Here is added some most valuable testimony to the present good condition of the South. It is a brief extract from the official report of the late lamented president of the great Southern Railroad, Samuel Spencer, than whom the South had no abler or better man. In accounting for the almost phenomenal growth of his railroad he said:

One exceedingly potential cause is the extraordinary industrial development of the South. In his last public address, the late president of this company, Mr. Samuel Spencer, referred to this development as this company, Mr. Samuel Spencer, referred to this development as follows:

"The South has entered upon a period of increased production in agriculture and in manufactures, and of general industrial and commercial activity, such as her best friends and most enthusiastic prophets had scarcely dreamed of fifteen years ago. Within that period the cash value of her cotton crop has doubled, the amount of pigiron produced at her furnaces has increased enormously, and the product of her coal mines has increased more than threefold. Cotton factories have sprung up within her borders to the extent that more of her cotton crop is now manufactured on her own soil than in all the mills of New England. The total value of her annual manufactures now aggregates nearly eighteen hundred millions. The total value of her agricultural products is now over seventeen hundred millions per annum."

This increase is likewise indicated in the volume of traffic handled by this company. In 1895 the number of tons of freight carried I mile was 1,098,932,884, while in 1806 the number of tons carried I mile was 4,488,915,839, showing an increase of over 300 per cent, or, allowing for the increased mileage, an increase of over 138 per cent; while in 1805 the number of passengers hauled I mile was 178,015,925 as against 549,518,645 in 1906, showing an increase of over 200 per cent, or, allowing for the increased mileage, an increase per mile of road of over 80 per cent.

Nowhere in the United States, except in the two States of the extreme Northwest, Washington and Oregon, has there been such industrial development as in the South.

THE OTHER SIDE.

Here I give some extracts from some Democratic speeches. They come from Louisiana:

Here I give some extracts from some Democratic speeches. They come from Louisiana:

Mr. Meyer. [March 25, 1897.] It may be and probably is true that without some well-considered measure of currency and financial reform no tariff adjustment can fully restore our prosperity as a people and revive our stagnant industries; but, as a Representative of Louisiana, representing great and suffering interests which so vitally concern the welfare of my district, and indeed our whole State, I can not hesitate as to my duty, and that is to aid in every way to have these important schedules become the law of the land as soon as prayiticable, and I shall rejoice to witness the benefits which it will confer on Louisiana. **

Mr. McEnery. [June 12, 1897.] Louisiana is vitally interested in the production of sait, lumber, rice, sugar, and cotton. The pending bill makes no discrimination in the arrangement of the schedules for revenue against these products. Why should she stand idly by and decline to accept the benefits to be derived from the necessary levying of revenue by impost duties? Call it what you will, protection or a revenue tariff with incidental protection, millions of dollars have to should the people of Louisiana resist the building of ottory, then, furniture factories, the erection of sawmills, the opening and improving of sugar fields, and the erection of central factories, the opening of salt mines, and hundreds of other industries that are just now coming into existence? * The South is more interested in the proper levying of a tariff than any other section of the country. Her development in manufacturing interests in the last two decades has been marvelous. This has been in spite of free-trade ideas and free-trade policy. Had there been a demand for adequate protection to her cotton mills, her wealth would have been doubled. Field and factic-y, the spindle and the plow, being in close relationship, would have doubled her productive capacity, would have given tended value to her lands, would have muniforming in

And four Representatives from Louisiana, to wit, Messrs. MEYER, DAVEY, BROUSSARD, and Price, voted for the Dingley bill. And I have not heard that they have ever regretted their act.

It is not my purpose to discuss the various questions that have arisen in connection with the subject-matter of this argument. The enemies of the protective tariff system of to-day are made up of men holding various and widely divergent opinions, but all of them hostile to the principle of protection. They may be classed as follows: First, free-traders, persons opposed to the levying of tariff duties, the men who preach the doctrine of absolute free trade. This body is made up of all sorts of people—Democrats, mugwumps, students of politics and philosophy, and so on. Then come the reciprocity men, the men who want to swap trade. You will generally find, however, that these men or their friends want reciprocity to apply especially to their own trade or manufacture. Then the revisionist, the man who says the fariff ought to be revised. Upward or downward? Oh, he never discusses that question; let us have a revision. Then comes the so-called "stand-patter," a term which has been applied to those who believe that the conditions should not be disturbed at the present time. The men who stood for the Dingley law at its enactment have never taken the ground that the act was so perfect in all its details that no changes in the schedules would ever be tolerated, except as changes might be forced by the overthrow of the Republican party of protection. Time, the fluctuations of trade, and manufacture change conditions, and naturally and necessarily there are items in the schedules of the Dingley bill that might well be changed, some higher, some lower, but they are not of such striking importance as to demand the sudden overthrow of present conditions and the reversal of present policies, and, above all things, there ought not to be any general revision of the tariff pending a Presidential election. Let us elect another Congress with the President, and then, if deemed necessary, let us enter upon a general revision of the tariff. Until then let us stand by the enactment that is bringing such boundless prosperity to our country. The principle of protection is engraved deeply in the good opinions of the wise men of the country, and it will be a sad day for American independence in the markets of the world and for American prosperity in the home markets of our country when it shall be repealed and repudiated.

There are others along that line.

Then came Louisiana always voting the Democratic ticket and always arguing in favor of the Republican tariff. a speech of Mr. MEYER which I will publish, and of their venerable Senator, both proposing to accept the Dingley bill as a probable benefit to the country. Neither one of them, I believe, voted for it, but we forced it upon them as we always force prosperity upon our outlying country to the South.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the House is tired, and I will pause here simply to ask permission of the House to publish certain tables stating the prices of corn, wheat, and all sorts of farm products during the several years since 1892; also the domestic prices of certain articles; also the prices of labor and the cost of living and a great many other statistics that relate to the subject-matter of my speech. I ask unanimous consent to publish these papers as a part of my remarks. So, Mr. Chairman, I conclude where I began, that however patriotic the Democratic party may be through its Representatives, however anxious they may be for the welfare of the people-and I do not criticise them in any respect whatever from that standpointtheir long adherence to a mistake in American politics, their long devotion to an idea that has been so often repudiated by the very fact that they themselves have challenged, has made it important and carries a lesson with it that can not be shunted aside or disobeyed, that the declarations of the Democratic party in Congress, or anywhere else, are not a safe guide for the people of my country. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Birdsall having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending protection of second proviso of section 1 of the act of December 21, 1904, to certain entrymen.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21574) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 222, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Cullom, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Teller as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, on Wednesday last the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster] engaged in an able and learned discussion of the subject of the treaty-making power, and on yesterday we listened to a clear exposition of the same question by the distinguished and learned lawyer the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley]. The conclusion drawn from the authorities quoted by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster] seems to be that by means of a treaty the Federal Government may legislate-indeed, has legislated-upon subjects which are generally supposed to have been reserved to the States. The impression conveyed was, although this was not directly stated by the gentleman, that at least in some cases the Federal Government could make encroachments upon the States through the treaty-making power when the Congress of the United States, expressing itself by means of a statute, would be held by the courts to be exercising powers not granted to it by the Constitution.

I think the authorities cited by the gentleman do not fully support this claim. On the contrary, it seems to be pretty well settled that the President and the Senate can make no treaty which the Congress of the United States could not afterwards supplement, alter, or repeal by a statute.

Although this has never been directly decided by the Federal courts, still the decisions on the treaty-making power lead very strongly to the conclusion that a treaty as well as a statute of the United States has no validity unless the power to deal with the subject-matter of it is conferred expressly or by necessary implication by the Constitution. There seems to be nothing in the authorities to give color to the claim that a treaty may invade territory from which the statute passed by Congress is ex-

In the case of Fong Yue Ting v. United States (149 U. S., 721) Mr. Justice Gray, delivering the opinion of the court,

A treaty, it is true, is in its nature a contract between nations, and is often merely promissory in its character, requiring legislation to carry its stipulations into effect. Such legislation will be open to future repeal or amendment. If the treaty operates by its own force and relates to a subject within the power of Congress, it can be deemed in that particular only the equivalent of a legislative act, to be repealed or modified at the pleasure of Congress. In either case the last expression of the sovereign will must control.

So far as a treaty made by the United States with any foreign nation can become the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as Congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal.

That the power to regulate the relations of the United States with foreign countries and the intercourse of the citizens of our own and other nations has been granted by the Constitution to the Federal Government can not, of course, be denied. That treaties made or statutes passed by the Federal Government for the purpose of such regulation must be held paramount over the constitution, laws, or local ordinances of any State must be admitted. But it may at least be doubted whether under the Constitution the treaty-making power of the Government could legislate by a treaty to take away the reserved rights of the States in a case where the Congress of the United States could not constitutionally do so. The case of Fong Yue Ting, above quoted, and several others that might be cited, seem to establish the principle that a treaty which requires no legislation to put it in force, but operates of itself, is to be regarded only as the equivalent of a statute, and that the Executive and the Senate can make no treaty in regard to the rights of aliens that could not be modified or wholly abrogated by a subsequent act of Congress. It would therefore seem to follow that the authority to make a treaty under the Constitution must be discovered by exactly the same process as the authority to pass a statute. The grant of power to make treaties, I venture to assert, must be exercised like any other power conferred upon any branch of the Federal Government, not as if it were the only grant contained in the instrument, but in full view of all the other provisions and subject to all the limitations of the Constitution, in order to give them all operation and authority. The provision of the Constitution reserving to the States or to the people all powers not granted to the Federal Government must be just as binding upon the treaty-making power as upon any other branch of the Government. Any other doctrine would be revolutionary in its tendency

In view of these principles, most of which are well settled by the decisions of the courts, what shall be said of the right claimed for the treaty-making power of the United States by a treaty with a foreign government to force the citizens of a State to tax themselves to maintain schools for the education of the children of unnaturalized aliens temporarily residing in such To come down to the specific case which has called forth this discussion of the extent of the treaty-making power, could the Executive and the Senate of the United States make a valid treaty with Japan under which the President of the United States could lawfully employ the Army and the Navy to compel the people of California or any municipality therein to tax themselves to furnish free education for the children of such unnaturalized subjects of the Mikado as might happen to be residing in such State or municipality? The provision of the Constitution that "direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers," ought, it would seem, to set that question at rest. No one will probably claim that the Federal Government could constitutionally levy direct taxes upon the people of California for the purpose of establishing and maintaining schools in which to educate the subjects of Japan sojourning in California; nor could Congress pass any law compelling the levying of such direct taxes by the several States for such pur-Where is the authority for claiming that the Federal Government may in this respect do by indirection, through a treaty, what it can not do directly? If the expense of maintaining the schools of California or any part of it was borne by the Federal Government there might be at least some basis for such a claim.

The gentleman from Vermont admits that California is under no obligation to the General Government to maintain schools or to educate anybody. But he states, "that the treaty-making power of the National Government can by treaty stipulation provide that the subjects of Japan may enjoy in the State of California, equally with the citizens of the State, such public schools as the State of California does maintain." Whether the treatymaking power could do this is at least subject to very grave doubt. Certainly no decision cited by the gentleman or any decision that I can find goes so far. All the decisions which he cited in support of this contention relate to the right of the alien to own, enjoy, and transfer property, to the right to labor for a livelihood, and generally the right to protection and to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Nearly all of these rights are guaranteed to all persons within the jurisdiction of the several States by the Federal Constitution, and are very different from a privilege enjoyed, for example, by the people of California, and for which they themselves pay. Between property rights—between those imperative rights guaranteed by the Constitution and the local privileges enjoyed by the people of California, for which they tax themselves and of which they may at will deprive themselves--there is a wide and most radical difference. If the Federal Government may by treaty or otherwise constitutionally invade these local privileges and dictate how they shall be enjoyed and who shall enjoy them, as yet the courts have not judicially determined that this is the supreme law of the land.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to enter upon any extended discussion of these constitutional questions, but I believe the time has come when I may discuss dispassionately and briefly the recent incidents in our history which have called forth these discussions. The recent San Francisco school incident, happily for the people of California, does not involve any of these constitutional questions, because when the facts are understood it will be found that San Francisco has not violated the treaty between this country and Japan. The only part of the treaty of 1894 between this country and Japan upon which any claim of violation could be based reads as follows:

In whatever relates to rights of residence and travel, to the possession of goods and effects of any kind, to the succession to personal estate by will or otherwise, and the disposal of property of any sort and in any manner whatsoever, which they may lawfully acquire, the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights and shall be subject to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens or subjects or citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation.

It is claimed by some that the right of residence thus granted to the citizens of Japan implies not only the right of all Japanese children to education in the public schools in this country and at public expense, but also the right to education in the same schools as the children of our own citizens or those of other foreign countries. In other words, it is claimed that under this treaty when a citizen of Japan comes to this country and takes up a temporary residence, as a matter of international right he can force himself or his children into any public school in the land without any reference to local or State laws, regulations, or customs. If this claim of Japan should be held to be well founded, before long we may expect to see Japan insisting that her treaty rights have been invaded and her citizens discriminated against, because we naturalize the subjects of Germany, for example, put them on the police force, and even send them to Congress, and the like privileges are not extended to citizens of In nearly every municipality in this country where there is any considerable percentage of colored population the colored school children are segregated from those of white parentage, yet under this claim of Japan her citizens are not to be held as bound by local school laws and regulations which have universally been held to be constitutional and proper and binding upon our citizens of colored blood.

But the assumption that the treaty of 1894 intended to give and does give to the subjects of Japan the right to free education is a violent one not warranted by the language of the treaty itself. The rights conferred by the treaty are clearly and specifically enumerated and the right to free public education is not among them. It should also be borne in mind that under our law Japanese can not become citizens, and therefore neither the United States nor the State of California would be chargeable with a duty to educate in order to prepare the future citizen for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

Even admitting that the treaty of 1894 does give to Japanese subjects equal opportunities for education in the public schools as our own citizens, still the board of education in segregating the children of Japanese parentage from the white children has violated no treaty and done no wrong. The Civil Code of California, section 1662, reads as follows:

(School.) Trustees shall have the power to exclude children of filthy or vicious habits, or children suffering from contagious or infectious diseases, and also to establish separate schools for Indian children and for children of Mongolian or Chinese descent. When such separate schools are established, Indian, Chinese, or Mongolian children must not be admitted into any other school.

In accordance with this statute, many years ago a separate school was established in San Francisco and has since been maintained for the education of Chinese children, called the oriental school. Since this separate school was established, in accordance with the positive mandate of the statute that "Indian, Chinese, or Mongolian children must not be admitted to any other school," the San Francisco school board had no alternative; it was obliged, under the law, to assign the Japanese children to the oriental school. Some unfavorable comment has been caused because there were only 93 Japanese children affected by the order of the board assigning them to the oriental school, 25 of whom were native born. If there were but 9 such children, the case would be the same; it was the duty of the board to assign them to the oriental school. This school is centrally located, as well equipped and with as competent teachers as any in the city. Chinese have been attending the oriental school for years, and nobody has discovered that their segregation was "a wicked absurdity."

Was it legal and proper for California or the school authorities of San Francisco to segregate the native-born school children of Mongolian descent, establish separate schools for them, and forbid them to attend the schools maintained for white children? There is not a particle of doubt that the San Francisco school board had a perfect legal right to do this. In Roberts v. City of Boston (5 Cushing, 198) it appeared that 160 primary schools were maintained in that city, and of this number two were devoted to the exclusive use of colored children and the balance to the exclusive use of white children. The opinion of the court, delivered by Chief Justice Shaw, held this to be legal and proper. Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal., 36, was an exactly similar case. The court approves the doctrine of the case of Roberts v. City of Boston, and holds that the exclusion of the colored children from the white schools was legal and proper. In State v. McCann (21 Ohio St., 198) it appeared that a colored school had been established, organized out of several adjoining districts for colored children, and they were excluded from the schools attended by white children. Action was brought to compel the admission of these colored children to the white schools. This application was denied and the court in its

The plaintiff, then, can not claim that his privileges are abridged on the ground of inequality of school advantages for his children. Nor can he dietate where his children shall be instructed, or what teacher shall perform that office, without obtaining privileges not enjoyed by white citizens. Equality of rights does not involve the necessity of educating white and colored persons in the same school any more than it does that of educating children of both sexes in the same school.

opinion uses this language:

The same doctrine is held in People ex rel. King v. Gallagher (93 New York, 438). The decisions of practically all the courts of the land down to the present time on this subject are in harmony with these principles.

It being, therefore, perfectly legal and proper for California and San Francisco to do just what has been done in the way of segregation of its native-born children of oriental descent, will it be claimed that the subjects of Japan have a right to education in white schools in defiance of the laws of California and the ordinance of San Francisco, which are binding upon native American citizens of oriental blood?

If it shall be decided that Japanese children have this right under the treaty, such decision would have far-reaching effects. For example, here in Washington the colored children are segregated and taught in separate schools, and are not allowed to attend the schools maintained for white children exclusively. There is in our treaty with Great Britain a provision very slmilar to the one I have quoted from the treaty with Japan. If

Japan and her friends are correct in their claim, the colored subjects of Great Britain from Jamaica or the Bermudas could come to Washington and insist upon attending the white schools here in spite of the school authorities of the District, or even of the Congress of the United States itself. A subject of Great Britain of Chinese descent from Hongkong could come to San Francisco and, refusing to attend the oriental school provided for him, could enlist the Federal Government, if necessary, to compel the white schools of that city to receive and teach him in defiance of the local authorities.

But the treaty clearly does not undertake to grant such right. The gentleman from Vermont admits that never in the history of our diplomacy has the treaty-making power undertaken to give to aliens rights above those enjoyed by our own citizens. I think it may confidently be asserted that the treaty-making power of the United States has never intended to make and has never made a treaty with Japan under which a citizen of Japan, on becoming a temporary resident of this country, by that act acquires the right to dictate to an American city how its public schools shall be run. If the treaty-making power should ever drift so far from our traditions and the popular conceptions of the powers of the Federal Government as to make such a treaty, I hope, for the sake of the right of local self-government, justly dear to the American people and jealously guarded by the citizens of all sections, that the courts would hold if, like a statute undertaking to accomplish the a statute undertaking to accomplish the same result, unconstitutional, and therefore void.

Since San Francisco and California in this Japanese school matter have only followed established and long-approved precedents, wherefore all this denunciation and abuse? Of what crime is California guilty to deserve the threat of the President of the United States to send against her people the armed forces of the United States? Mr. Chairman, she is guilty of desiring to remain American. Her sole offense is that she is strong in the determination to maintain within her borders the civilization of the Caucasian race. Her only crime is that she is trying to go forward with the working out of the national and social and moral ideals of our fathers and is sending out a strong cry against the orientalizing of the Pacific coast by the sons of Nippon or by any other Asiatic immigrants.

The people of California feel no hatred of Japan as a nation nor of the Japanese coolies who have been lately coming to their State in large numbers. As a Representative of California upon this floor I hesitate to say words that might be thought unkind by our Japanese friends. But the people of California know that the ideals of most of the Japanese who have come among them are not American ideals; their ways are not our ways. Theirs is a race different and distinct from ours; very different physically, with a different religion, entirely different traditions reaching back for centuries, different ideas of the family life; and in many ways their viewpoint is totally different from ours. Any attempt to amalgamate these Japanese coolies with our stock would give rise to race problems more difficult of solution than our brothers of the South are now trying to solve. Although the Japanese have been coming to California in numbers for about seven years, there is yet no sign of the establishment of any social relations between them and any element of our population, and I feel sure from what I know of the Japanese character that no matter how long they stay, or whether born on our soil or in Japan, they will continue alien and distinctively Japanese and not American. The leopard can not change his spots. The Creator made the two races different, and different they will remain. I am aware that there is the highest authority for asserting that "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth," and the same high authority has intimated that it is a good and pleasant thing for brethren to dwell together in unity, but there is not a single example in history of two peoples, racially widely different, living together in peace, unless one race was subject to the other or the two races were amalgamated. Under our form of government one race can not live in legal subjection to the other, and I think all students of the subject agree that the Japanese can not be assimilated.

In discussing Japanese immigration in California appeals to selfish interests and commercial considerations are most often heard. But this question should be settled upon higher grounds than these. In the light of our experience of the last hundred years, if the negro inhabitants of this country numbered only 100,000, confined to two or three States along the Atlantic seaboard, would we welcome the coming from Africa of large numbers of colored immigrants until they reached a total of mil-I believe that nearly every thinking American will answer this question in the negative. Yet this supposititious case is exactly parallel with the conditions now existing on the Pacific coast in Japanese immigration. With the race problem of the South before them it seems clear that the people of the United States should steadfastly exclude from permanent residence and citizenship in large numbers any race which can not be readily amalgamated with our own stock. But even if assimilation of the Japanese coming to this country would take place easily and rapidly, is such assimilation desirable? What strength or grace of body or mind not already possessed by our people could this totally dissimilar race bring to us? They are certainly much inferior to us physically, and there is the highest scientific authority for claiming that such assimilation would bring only evil. In this connection I beg to quote Herbert Spencer. In his famous letter to Baron Kaneko Kentaro, Mr. Spencer said:

bert Spencer. In his famous letter to Baron Kaneko Kentaro, Mr. Spencer said:

To your remaining question respecting the intermarriage of foreigners and Japanese, which you say is "now very much agitated among our scholars and politicians," and which you say is "one of the most difficult problems," my reply is that, as rationally answered, there is no difficult problems," my reply is that, as rationally answered, there is no difficulty at all. It should be positively forbidden. It is not at root a question of social philosophy. It is at root a question of biology. There is abundant proof, alike furnished by the intermarriage of human races and by the interbreeding of animals, that when the varieties mingled diverge beyond a certain slight degree, the result is inevitably a bad one in the long run. I have myself been in the habit of looking at the evidence bearing on this matter for many years past, and my conviction is based on numerous facts derived from numerous sources. This conviction I have within the last half hour verified, for I happen to be staying in the country with a gentleman who is well known and has had much experience respecting the interbreeding of cattle; and he has just, on inquiry, fully confirmed my belief that when, say, of the different varieties of sheep, there is an interbreeding of those which are widely unlike, the result, especially in the second generation, is a bad one—there arises an incalculable mixture of traits and what may be called a chaotic constitution. And the same thing happens among human beings—the Eurasians in India, the half-breed in America show this. The physiological basis of this experience appears to be that any one variety of creature in course of many generations acquires a certain constitution which will not work properly, because it is not fitted for any set of conditions whatever. By all means, therefore, peremptorily interdict marriages of Japanese with foreigners.

I have for the reasons indicated entirely approved of the regulations which have been establ

I quote also from another high authority, Pouchet. He says:

If we have endeavored to prove that the hybrids of distant races do not possess all the necessary conditions of animal life and of propagation, it would be easy to find numerous proofs in order to show that generally the intellectual conditions of hybrids are not much more satisfactory than their physical condition. Doctor Tschudi says, in speaking of the Zambos (hybrids from the aborigines and negroes at Lima):

"As men they are greatly inferior to the pure races, and as members of society they are the worst class of citizens; they alone furnish four-fifths of the criminals in the prisons of Lima.

"Mr. E. G. Squier has made the same observation about the Zambos of Nicaragua. In his part of the country the union of Spaniards with these same Americans seems to have only produced degenerate men, who show no capacity whatsoever for perfection."

According to these scientific lights, then, there are already too many mongrels in the world. Why should the United States consent to add to the stock by permitting a possible mixture of totally different races in the States on the Pacific slope?

Attempts have been made in a portion of the eastern press in this country to throw discredit upon the authoritative statement of Herbert Spencer, which I have just quoted, by showing that in this same letter Mr. Spencer took just as positive grounds upon other questions—questions of statesmanship and public policy then agitating the minds of the public men of Japan-which were entirely untenable and which experience has demonstrated to have been wholly wrong. The fact that Mr. Spencer made the mistake of leaving the subject of biology, in the study of which and kindred subjects he had spent his life, and going into other fields to speak with authority upon subjects about which he knew little or nothing should not be allowed to throw discredit upon his statement concerning a scientific matter upon which he was then the greatest living authority. He made the same mistake that some of our emi-nent American public men have recently been making by joining in condemnation of the sentiments of the people of California as wholly unworthy, and discussing with learned dogmatism Japanese immigration when they have never seen a Japanese coolie in their lives and have no practical knowledge of the subject whatever.

According to the bureau of labor statistics of California, last year the arrivals of Japanese at the port of San Francisco alone, in excess of departures, numbered nearly 1,000 per month.

This takes no account of the arrivals at other ports of the United States, nor of those who come in over the borders from Canada and Mexico. This year this net increase promises to be much more, and a high authority estimates that there are now 50,000 Japanese in California-nearly all male wage-earn-And yet many people in the East do not understand nor sympathize with the alarm with which the people of California view this increasing immigration. Members of this House have recently said to me, "Ten or fifteen thousand per year! That is nothing to cause alarm. Why, we are getting a million aliens a year from Europe over here in the East and think nothing I beg to remind these gentlemen that we have in California about 2,000,000 people, one-fortieth of the population of the United States. Multiply 10,000 or 15,000, the number of yearly Japanese accessions to our population, by forty, and you have 400,000 to 600,000. Do these gentlemen suppose that if 400,000 to 600,000 Japanese coolies were annually landing in New York and spreading themselves over the States of the East, and this immigration was rapidly increasing, there would be no alarm and no protest by the people? I dare assert that as soon as the people east of the Rocky Mountains became acquainted by practical experience with the character of this immigration, and what its continued increase meant to our country, there would be an insistent demand for immediate exclusion legislation which would not be denied. But we are away off on the western rim of the continent, and our cry is small and faint, and the rest of the country is slow to hear and to heed.

But our alarm is not based alone on theory. At our very doors, in the Territory of Hawaii, we have an object lesson. By looking at the conditions there we can see what the Pacific coast is destined to become if the present temper of the Federal Government continues. Thirty years ago there were no Japanese worth mentioning in the Territory of Hawaii, yet to-day they are a majority of all the inhabitants of the islands. Doctor Neill, of the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, has recently compiled a very interesting report on conditions in Hawaii, which has been issued by the Department as Bulletin No. 66. This report shows that the Japanese, with the few Chinese and Koreans now in the islands, are doing 85 per cent of the plantation work and 75 per cent of the work in all other occupations, skilled and unskilled. American skilled labor will soon be driven from the islands, and unless conditions change the labor of the islands will finally be wholly monopolized by the Japanese. They have invaded all avocations there. Many of them are contractors, and 75 per cent of the merchants and traders of the islands are orientals. All that seems to remain to be done to make these islands a Japanese colony is to pull down the Stars and Stripes and hoist the flag of Japan.

The people of the Pacific coast are firm in the conviction that, unless the result is prevented by legislation, the Pacific coast in the next twenty-five years will certainly become as completely orientalized as Hawaii has been. Their conviction is based not wholly upon shadowy fears, nor even upon the experience of Hawaii, but they see this orientalizing process well on the way in parts of California. In the Vaca Valley, for example, from which has come for many years the earliest California fruits, this orientalizing process is well advanced toward completion. Only a few years ago the Japanese came in as laborers in the orchards, later they began to lease and then to buy the orchards, until now one-half the orchards of the fair Vaca Valley are owned or leased by Japanese. Five Japanese own orchards of some 200 acres and many others smaller amounts. The presence of Japanese in any numbers in any community brings the Japanese shopkeeper and trader, the Japanese banker, shoemaker, and Japanese engaged in every form of human employment, and these Japanese business houses get the trade of their countrymen to the exclusion of the white stores.

In Antioch I am advised that truck farming on the Tule lands is rapidly going through the same transformation, and in the raisin-growing districts of Fresno County it is already beginning. In that county one Japanese owns 320 acres of vineyard, another 160 acres, and others smaller amounts. Our people know that as the Jap already has the Vaca Valley so in a short time he will take the Antioch district and the Fresno region, as well as any other district that he chooses to invade.

The causes of these rapid and peaceful commercial conquests are several. In the first place, most Americans do not care to live in a neighborhood where a large percentage of the population is Japanese. They sell or lease their orchards or property at the best price they can get from Japanese or anyone else, and get out. The same thing takes place in San Francisco. When a crowd of Japanese rent a house in the residence portion of that city at once there is a great fall in the price of real estate—in some cases as much as 50 per cent—and an exodus from the neighborhood begins.

But the chief cause for these rapid Japanese conquests is the fact that white labor can not compete with oriental, and especially with Japanese labor. Accustomed to live on a little rice and dried fish, to sleep on a board, and to do with very few of the comforts of life, no white man can hope to hold the field against him. We pass high-tariff laws to protect the American laborer against the products of cheap foreign labor. We Republicans have promised to protect him from this cheap labor. Shall we "keep this promise to the ear and break it to the hope" by permitting, not the products, but the cheapest laborers themselves to come and compete with him at his own door, under the very shadow of his home?

Accustomed at home to labor for a few cents a day, our wages in California seem to the Jap fabulously princely, and it is no wonder that he is eager to reach that land of promise. He is shrewd enough to get as much for his labor as he can, but when he invades a field he cuts under the ruling white wages enough to get the business. Thus the Jap has come to monopolize the labor of the fruit industry of the Vaca Valley, the seed industry of Santa Clara County, and the berry fields and orchards of Watsonville, and thus they will come to monopolize the labor of the Pacific coast, unless their coming be prevented in some way.

Some employers of labor are at first induced to employ Japanese by the temptation of securing cheap labor. But once in possession of the field they cease to be cheap, and no labor union ever was more despotic in its demands than a company of Japanese laborers secure in the possession of a particular field from which they have driven competition. Ask the planters of Hawaii if what I am saying is not true.

The Japanese contractor employs his countrymen at first almost at his own price. He boards his men in his shack at a total expense of $5 or $6 per month, and many of these coolies are in virtual slavery to pay for their passage across the Pacific and have little or nothing to say about what their wages shall be. Thus equipped, he starts, as he started in Hawaii, in a California city or town to get business. He will soon be enabled to drive the white contractor out of business or compel him to employ The same thing is true of the Japanese orchardist and truck farmer. He can make all kinds of money selling his product at prices that drive the American employing white labor to the wall. And so, unless arrested by legislation, the process of transforming the Pacific coast from an American into an oriental habitation will go on to its inevitable conclusion. What remedy does the Pacific coast propose for the correction of these present and future evils? We ask that the Chinese exclusion act shall be extended to embrace Japanese and all other Asiatic laborers. The Asiatic coolie is the key to the situation. On the laborer as a foundation rests the oriental industrial structure, just as the industrial structure everywhere rests upon labor. Exclude the laborer and every other condition to which we object will correct itself.

Nearly one year ago in discussing this subject upon this floor my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] expressed the fear that if we should pass such legislation as the Pacific coast is asking we would have trouble, perhaps war, with Japan. Why should trouble come? The treaty of 1894 provides for such legislation. The provisions of the Chinese-exclusion act could be extended to embrace Japanese laborers without violating either in letter or spirit our treaty with Japan. The last paragraph of Article II of that treaty reads as follows:

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to trade, the immigration of laborers, police and public security which are in force or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

But how is Japan observing the terms of this treaty, under which she is demanding such extraordinary rights and privileges? Americans are not allowed to enter the schools of Japan. They are not allowed to own real estate or engage in mining there. If the business of an American resident of Japan requires him to own real property, he can not purchase or hold it except in the name of some Japanese subject. Should an American laborer go to Japan, he would not be allowed to work unless he procured a license from the prefecture of the district where he was residing. This license would, of course, not be granted if the job he was seeking was wanted by any Japanese laborer. These things I am stating on the authority of a distinguished Japanese lawyer who delivered an address recently before the American Bar Association at Saratoga, N. Y. I am also advised by those who have lived in Japan and speak from experience that Americans in Japan are obliged to pay double the taxes that are assessed against natives. If they wish to attend the theater and the price of a ticket to a native would be 60 sen, the American will be forced to pay 200 sen, and in other things it is the same. Besides these things, the ways in which the Japanese undertake to drive out of Japan any American who embarks in business there are most exasperating.

I have here a letter from a gentleman now living in New York which shows more in detail how this is done. He writes as follows:

Nos. 140 and 142 Pearl Street, New York, N. Y., December 13, 1906.

Nos. 140 and 142 Peael Street, New York, N. Y., Becember 13, 1906.

Hon. E. A. Hayes.

Member of Congress Fifth Congressional District of California,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Your favor of the Sth duly reached me, and before replying I wished to secure, as requested, the name of an authority on Japanese laws and their bearing on foreigners under the treaties. The following, "A digest written for the international committee of Yokohama," by Dr. L. Lonholm, will give you particulars:

The treaty may read nice to people on this side who have never been to Japan and have never traded with the Japanese, but there are so many differences between what the United States allows a Japanese when here and what the Japanese Government allows an American in Japan it makes one disgusted and anxious to quit doing anything or having anything to do with Japan or the Japanese.

There is a law in Japan forbidding the transfer of land to foreigners, and under the new treaties foreigners are not entitled to own land. Foreigners can own buildings. The land on which such buildings stand may be held by the foreigners under either a lease or a superficies. Americans can not practice law in Japan or become a printer, editor, or publisher of a newspaper. Americans can not engage in mining in Japan.

While the treaty apparently gives an American the same rights as a Japanese, you will note that the Japanese were shrewd enough not to mention in the treaty that they had already passed imperative laws which no treaty could abrogate unless mentioned in the treaty.

My idea is that this time the Japa know they have made a mistake, as they never dreamed of a refusal, and supposed by making a big noise California would at once apologize and open its schools. Japan never expected the final turn down and the subsequent events, knowing full well that an investigation of the treaty will expose the one-sided affair it is.

Some years ago the Japanese Government began paying a subsidy to the Japanese Tea Guild, the objec full well that an investigation of the treaty will expose the one-sided affair it is.

Some years ago the Japanese Government began paying a subsidy to the Japanese Tea Guild, the object being to drive out the American tea men. The subsidy was paid under the name of a sum to be used to advertise the good qualities of Japan teas and thus add to their consumption. This was unnecessary, as the United States and Canada bought and consumed all the leaf Japan could sell for export. Shortly after the Japanese Government began paying the money Japanese began opening up tea offices in New York, Chicago, and other points, and native tea-firing plants began to operate in the interior tea-growing points of Japan. It then developed that the rents and expenses of the different tea offices in the United States were being paid out of the money paid by the Japanese Government; also that the native tea-firing hongs were being paid 50 yen for every firing pan they put up. It was even bragged of by the Japa in New York that they would soon drive the Americans out of the trade, as they were being backed by their Government.

The writer brought the whole matter up with the State Department, and the Japanese Government agreed to cease paying the subsidy, but, as usual, lied and paid it. On again bringing the matter up the Japanese edidently told the State Department to mind its own business; at least, from the letter I received from the State Department, I inferred as much and ceased trying to get protection. My contention was that the Japanese bounty was an export bounty and that teas on which that bounty was paid should, according to the Dingley tariff, pay an import duty equal to the export duty.

I will be pleased at any time to give you any further particulars, and trust you will never allow a Jap in your public schools, although I believe most of the States in the East, from ignorance of the Jap, would make no objection.

Yours, very truly,

It seems to one of the most humble members of this coordinate branch of the Government that our most distinguished Secretary of State could not be better employed than in striving to secure for American citizens in Japan those rights guaranteed to them by the treaty, but which they are nevertheless denied.

Mr. Chairman, the people of California have one of the fairest spots on all the earth. It is their home, and they love it.

They are Americans, and they are here asking Americans to so legislate as to protect them from an insidious conquest of orientals, which, unless prevented by law, will overwhelm them, destroying or rendering wholly uncongenial the homes which they fondly hope to hand down to their children with all the holy influences around them that now pervade the American home. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is my call to the attention of this committee two bills which I have introduced to wit, H. R. 14609 and H. R. 14610. The former has been referred to the Committee on War Claims and the latter to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I am urging the passage of H. R. 14609 because of the fact that adequate recognition has never been given to the sufferings and hardships of all Union prisoners of war by the Government of the United States. Large sums of money have been appropriated for the purpose of pensioning the men who fought in the Union armies for periods of ninety days to three years or more. The pension rolls carry probably all of those still surviving who went through the horrors of Confederate military prisons, yet for these experiences, which more than outweigh any others of the dangers of hardships of war, the Federal Government has never seen fit to set apart a sum of money as compensation. The pensions under the general laws in no way compensate these men for their sufferings. In the first place, men who contracted disabilities that have burdened their lives from the day of their release from such places as Andersonville and Libby have great difficulty and oftentimes are unable to prove the incurrence of these disabilities in the service in the line of duty, and secondly, their meager pensions do not begin to repay them for the sufferings endured and for the physical anguish and loss of vigor that more or less affected their career in after years. It is because of these reasons that I have introduced the bill above referred to, which provides that all Federal soldiers who were honorably discharged and who were confined in Confederate prisons shall be paid in the sum of $2 for each day of confinement therein. Provision is also made for the widow of the soldier if she be not remarried, and she is entitled under the provisions of this bill to receive the same sum as would have been paid to the husband because of said imprisonment.

Practically every association of ex-prisoners of war throughout the United States has recommended the enactment of such a law. Since I have introduced this bill letters have reached me from broken-down soldiers-residents of every part of the United States-who urgently plead that something be done in the way of recognition for the sufferings which they endured.

Coming down to the practical side of the question, it may be asked how great a sum would be diverted every year from the Treasury of the United States should this bill become a law. This is a very difficult question to answer, and it is, perhaps, impossible to give any definite or reliable figures. because of the fact that the records of the Confederate military prisons were fragmentary and often, at best, unreliable. Therefore it is a matter of considerable speculation as to the number of men who were actually confined in Confederate prisons, and especially as to the number of men who survived incarceration. I have made every effort to obtain reliable information in this direction. Gen. F. C. Ainsworth, in a letter to me under date of April 9, 1906, in answer to a request for this information, states as follows:

According to the best information now obtainable, it appears that 211,411 Union soldiers were captured during the civil war, of which number 16,668 were paroled on the field, and that consequently 194,743 were held in captivity. It also appears that 30,218 Union soldiers died while in captivity; but the records of Confederate prisons in the possession of the War Department are by no means complete, and the number of deaths of Union prisoners of war is doubtless much greater than the number herein stated. * * * The total number of deaths in Confederate prisons will never be definitely known.

Other authorices do not give as large a number of prisoners in the Confederate prisons. In the statistical record of the armies of the United States prepared by Frederick Pfeister, late a captain in the United States Army, it is estimated that the missing and captured on the Union side totaled 184,791. In other words, he says that one out of every fifteen had been captured or reported missing. As showing the discrepancy between figures and estimates of the number of Union men confined in southern prisons, the following figures, taken from the work entitled "Prisoners of War and Military Prisons," by Asa B. Isham, are submitted. He states that the captured white troops numbered 86 in every 1,000 men. From these varied reports it is safe to say that probably not more than 100,000 men of the Union forces lived through their prison experience and were returned to the Union Army. In the forty years or more that have elapsed since the close of the war it is more than probable to suppose that at least half of this number have died. It seems more reasonable to accept the statement of Mr. Isham in the work above referred to, after making allowances for the dis-crepancies between the records of the Confederate military prisons and the actual facts. The steps in his recapitulation at the end of his very excellent argument show that the total number of men captured by the rebels amounted to 188,145; the number paroled, estimated at one-half, amounted to 94,072; the number actually confined in prison, 94,072; the number of deaths in Confederate prisons, 36,401; per cent of mortality in rebel prisons, 38,7 per cent ons, 38.7 per cent. On the basis of these figures, but 57,671 Union soldiers left the rebel prisons alive. It is no extravagant estimate to state that perhaps 50 per cent of this number have died since the war. Thus not more than 20,000 soldiers and soldiers' widows would reap the benefit sought to be conferred by this bill.

There can be no doubt that the men who endured the agonies of prison life or tortures of confinement in the prison pens when partisanship ran high deserve the small bounty which this bill provides. The Government has proven its generosity in the case of men who served but three months during the last call of the war. It has never recognized the supreme sacrifices of its prisoners of war, and it seems but fitting and proper that the policy of liberality which has come to prevail in pension matters should be put in force before it is too late to benefit the survivors of the awful days of confinement and distress in Confederate military prisons.

In introducing H. R. 14610, which is referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I did so in answer to a general demand that a more fair, just, and equitable law be passed granting relief to the widows of the veterans of the civil war. Over forty years have passed since the war was terminated. We have had another war since that time, and had, approximately, on June 30, 1906, on the pension rolls some 22,621 pensioners as the result of this last struggle. From time to time Congress has enacted laws that have sought to increase the sums paid to those who survived in that great conflict from 1861 to 1865, to their widows, and to the dependent children. The sentiment seems to be general that there should be a more liberal general pension law, since statistics show that because of death, remarriage, legal limitation, failure to claim, and other causes, approximately 47,000 pensioners are dropped from the rolls each year. In 1905, to be explicit, the number dropped was 47,444, of which number 25,208 were civil-war survivors

That there is a sentiment for more liberal pension legislation is evidenced by the willingness of Congress to enact special pension legislation to relieve those unfortunate claimants who are unable, for various reasons, to obtain proper relief from the Bureau of Pensions. The special bill is not satisfactory. It helps a few, but it does not relieve the conditions affecting the great body of men and women whose claim upon the Government is based upon patriotic services during the days of national peril. General laws should be passed making unnecessary the enactment of special legislation, by rendering fair and equal justice to all claimants under the pension laws. No better example of inequitable legislation can be found than the present act of June As a step in the direction of liberality and fairness, I have introduced the bill before mentioned, which proposes to amend what is commonly known as the "act of June 27, 1890." The original act provides that the widow of a soldier who was married before the 27th of June, 1890, and whose income does not exceed $250 in any one year, may, upon proof of this marriage, without proving the husband's death from service causes, receive $8 per month. I seek to amend this act by amending the date of marriage so as to bring it forward ten years, to the 27th day of June, 1900, and increasing the pension allowed to $12 per month. In the bill as introduced I have raised the income limit from $250 to $350 per year, but I will say at this time that after careful investigation I find this income clause the most common reason for rejection, and considering the increased cost of living, I will, when the bill is considered by the committee to which it has been referred, urge that this income clause be stricken out altogether.

It must be admitted that in these days of advanced cost of living an income of even $350 will not suffice to keep an aged widow in even moderately comfortable circumstances. This is more particularly true owing to the methods pursued by the Pension Department in estimating the income. Oftentimes a soldier dies, leaving to his widow a small house and practically no money with which to maintain it. Yet, in estimating her income, the rental value of that house is charged against her, and in frequent cases coming under my observation this amounts to at least one-half of the income limit now provided by law, leaving to the widow but $125 a year for her actual living expenses, clothing, and other incidentals. I therefore propose that the income clause be stricken out entirely, and in support of this contention I wish at this point to incorporate in my remarks the following figures and comparisons for the consideration or the committee:

During the past year ending January 1, 1907, there were rejected, from all causes, 3,759 widow applicants for pension. I am informed by the Pension Department that not more than one-third of this number could be credited to the income-limitation clause of the act of June 27, 1890, since remarriage, failure to claim, proof of the existence of the husband for whom pension is claimed, or the hundred other circumstances which are turned up by the Pension Department every week are the reasons for rejections of the claims. It seems fair, therefore, to take either one-third or one-fourth of 3,759 as the number that would be added during any one year by the removal of the income limitation. On the basis of one-third there would be 1,253 widows who would be pensioned at $8 per month or $96 per year, or a total of $120,288. On the basis of one-fourth, or 940 additional pensioners at $96 per year, the addition to the pension roll would be $90,240. On the basis of ten years, supposing 2,000 of the claimants would die within the decade—a very reasonable presumption—the addition because of this amendment would amount to $710,400. This might perhaps seem a big sum; but when it is considered that over 47,000 are being dropped every year from the rolls, and that this proportion will rapidly increase every year, the amendment is not drastic or in any sense unreasonable.

On January 31, 1905, there were borne on the rolls of the Pension Department 1,004,196 pensioners, and on June 30, 1906, there appeared the names of 985,971 pensioners. In eighteen months, therefore, there was a net decrease of 18,225 pensioners. The average amount of each pension, according to the Commissioner of Pensions, is $138.18. On June 30, 1905, there were 998,441 pensioners on the roll, and on June 30, 1906, 985,971, a net decrease of 12,472. On the basis of the decrease in the roll of pensioners for the year ended June 30, 1906, at the average amount of each pension for the year, $138.18, the amount of decrease would be $1,723,380.96. If the property limitation was stricken out, therefore, the decrease in expenditure for one year would largely exceed the pensions of all additions to the roll of widow applicants on the basis previously indicated.

On June 30, 1906, there were 175,237 widows pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, and 76,810 under the general law, making a total of 252,047 widows drawing pensions. 30, 1905, there were 169,066 widows drawing under the act of June 27, 1890, and 77,620 drawing under the general law, or a total of 246,686. There was thus a net increase of 5,361 June 30, 1906, as compared with June 30, 1905, a gain of 6,171 under the act of June 27, 1890, and a loss of 810 under the general law. Looking at the other side of the proposition, there were on June 30, 1906, 461,078 invalids pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, and 205,375 under the general law, making a total of 666,453. The total for June 30, 1905, of pensioners under the act of June 27, 1890, and the general law is 684,608. would be a reduction, therefore, from 1905 to 1906 of 18,155 men pensioners. On June 30, 1906, there were 205,375 men drawing pensions under the general law, while on June 30, 1905, there were 219,384 drawing under the general law. In this one year, therefore, there were dropped from the rolls 14,009 pensioners under the general law. The great majority of this number probably died, since, as cited above, 6,171 widows were added under the act of June 27, 1890, and none under the general law—in fact, there was a reduction under the general law. This is conclusive proof that but one woman was added for every three men whose pensions were dropped. Further, pensions under the general law provide a much larger distribution of money than the widows' pensions, which at most reach but $12 per month.

The number of pensioners reached high-water mark January 31, 1905. The total was 1,004,196. There will be a rapid decrease in the ensuing ten years, as is indicated by the large decrease in the past fiscal year. The tide is rapidly ebbing and many thousands will be dropped in the next decade. It will be seen from the statistics given that the proposed amendment will not add anything to the appropriation, but will simply take up a part of that which will be saved each year because of the death of the veterans of the civil war.

The second provision of this amendment provided that the widows who were married prior to June 27, 1900, shall become eligible for pensions. I know of no means by which statistics could be obtained showing the exact number who would be benefited by thus putting forward the time from marriage from 1890 to 1900, but I do not believe that this addition would be considerable, and if it was, I still insist that in justice and equity the woman who has married and lived with a soldier since shortly after June, 1890, up to the present time and who has devoted sixteen years of her life as a faithful wife should not be barred by an arbitrary time limitation. I have heard it claimed that the original date was fixed to bar adventuresses from marrying old soldiers in order to procure this pittance. This is an insult to American womanhood, and if for no other reason than to express our confidence in the purity and honor of the women of this country, who are sought in marriage by the soldiers of the civil war, this date should be brought for-ward to the time designated in the amendment. It could by no possibility attract adventuresses, since those who married after June 27, 1890, did so with the full understanding that they were barred from drawing a pension. Sixteen years have passed since that date, and most of the marriages contracted in this period have not been between veterans and young women, but rather between veterans and women of middle age. It would seem that some provision should be made for caring for the widows who gave their services late in life to ministering to the broken and suffering veterans of the war. The addition would be inconsiderable, and the good accomplished would far outweigh any money consideration.

I would urge that the committee consider this proposed legislation carefully. With our wonderful national wealth, with a great surplus piling up in the Treasury of the United States, there can be no more auspicious time to lighten to some extent the burdens that oppress the widows of the soldiers of the civil war. This amendment to the act of June 27, 1890, would work inestimable good and place upon the roll many deserving women. From the figures which I have submitted with my remarks, it can be readily shown that the amount such legislation would withdraw from the National Treasury would not be of any consequence. In fact, I am sure that it would not in any way increase the appropriation, or even reach the appropriation for pensions made in 1904 and other preceding years. I believe this proposed legislation is just, because I believe that we owe to the widow of the soldier some equitable and just recognition for her services in the home, I will urge a favorable report of this bill. There is no better way of showing honor and respect to and earning the gratitude of patriotic American womanhood. [Loud applause.]
Mr. KLINE. Mr. Chairman, on divers occasions during my

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Chairman, on divers occasions during my brief Congressional career I attempted to have remedial and effective legislation enacted for the benefit of certain classes of survivors of the civil and Spanish-American wars. I recognize that other Members of this House have had the same designs and purposes in mind, but hitherto our efforts have been fruitless in that direction.

Our appeals on certain phases of this class of legislation were listened to by a deaf ear in the past. During the first session of this Congress I introduced a bill providing that all soldiers and sailors who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion and the Spanish-American war, who had been honorably discharged, and who were or might hereafter be suffering from the loss of sight of both eyes and had become totally blind from causes not resulting while in the service of the United States and not the result of vicious or intemperate habits, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, and that they be granted a pension of $30 per month.

At this session I introduced a bill (H. R. 21378) on the same subject, broader and more extensive, providing that all soldiers and sailors who served ninety days or more in the military or naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion or the Spanish-American war, who have been honorably discharged, and who are or may hereafter be suffering from the loss of sight of both eyes, and that all soldiers and sailors who are or may become bedridden, who are or may become utterly helpless, who are or may become paralytics, and who are or may become painfully or permanently disabled from causes not occurring whilst in the service of the United States, upon making due proof of the fact of the said several disabilities, be placed upon the pension list of the United States and be granted a pension of $30 per month. In fairness to all sufferers from such disabilities such legislation should be enacted.

Congress has established the precedent of granting in numerous and frequent instances $30 per month, by special bill, to survivors of the civil war who were blind when such a disability was not the result of military or naval service. Congress has also established the precedent of granting by special bill $24 to $30 per month to survivors of the civil war who were bedridden, utterly helpless, paralytics, and who had become painfully and permanently disabled, where such disabilities were not the result of service origin.

There are many surviving soldiers in the United States who are suffering from the disabilities enumerated in said bill or bills introduced. Without a special bill, survivors of the civil war or the Spanish-American war suffering from disabilities enumerated in the bills introduced can not secure more than the maximum sum of $12 per month. This latter allowance is granted to them by and through the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890.

Why should not all honorably discharged soldiers, who were in the service ninety days and upward, and who are blind, bedridden, utterly helpless, paralytic, and painfully and permanently disabled, and thereby unable to perform mental or manual labor, have like benefits and equal rewards? Why should A, blind, receive a pension of $30 per month, and B, his next neighbor, similarly afflicted and disabled, be limited to his allowance or gratuity granted him by the provisions of the act of Congress above referred to? Why should C, honorably discharged, and in the service more than ninety days, bedridden, or utterly helpless, or a paralytic, painfully and permanently disabled, not the result of his military service and not the result of vicious or intemperate habits, be the beneficiary of the liberality of Congress to the extent of twenty-four or thirty dollars per month, and his neighbor, D, similarly afflicted, be limited to $12 per month? These and such inequalities do exist and should be corrected and remedied by proper and adequate legislation.

Why has Congress been so tardy and hesitated so long on this subject? True, Congress has been liberal in many respects, and has rewarded the great majority of our old soldiers, but it has also compelled many, afflicted as above described, to patiently wait until their remains were deposited in the tomb or to the last of their declining days.

The storm of life is rapidly thinning and decimating the ranks of the survivors. Another decade and all the survivors of the civil war will be beyond the septuagenarian period of life. I am not complaining of the liberality or the nonliberality of Congress on this subject in the past, but I complain that those possessing the same class and form of disability are not uniformly rewarded for their services and consequent suffering.

The Invalid Pension Committee of the House and the Senate and their clerks are overworked, and are doing the best and most they can to grant relief during the period that Congress is in session. Every Member of Congress introduces special bills for original and increase of pensions. Many a Member introduces thirty and forty bills for original and increase of pension and relief during a session when he is well advised that not more than one-fourth or one-fifth of his bills can and will be considered by the committee.

All the cases may be equally meritorious. There are 386 Members in this body. The committee is endeavoring to be fair and just, and that each Member shall, as near as possible, have an equal number of special pension bills considered at each session or term of Congress. Take it for granted that each Member at each session secures favorable consideration of half a dozen special pension bills, the aggregate number acted upon would exceed 2,300 cases, and such a number of bills would tax the time and ability of the most efficient committee and most competent clerks during a session of average length and duration

I introduced at the first session of this Congress thirty-seven pension bills—all meritorious, in my judgment—under the precedent established and followed, and but nine were favorably acted upon. Those not considered must wait the opportunity at a subsequent session, or the order in which I or my successor may choose to have the same considered by the committee.

I predict that by the time all the bills introduced by me during the last session and previous sessions of Congress can and will be considered by the committee, under the established rules and existing practice, one-half of those asking for relief by special bill will have passed into eternity. And the experience of a majority of the Members of this body is identical with my own experience.

The passage of a bill or bills such as I have introduced will increase the pensions paid but a trifling sum as compared with the aggregate of pension appropriations heretofore provided for. Usually those most advanced in years, most feeble, and seriously and painfully disabled are selected to be rewarded by special legislation. Their days are numbered, and generally they do not long survive the period when they are allowed an increase. Many of those whom I endeavored to favor did not survive a year to enjoy such blessings and benefits.

In the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress the committee and this House favorably considered only three of the special bills introduced by me, and I regret to say that all three died in less than a year after their pecuniary reward for services granted by Congress was announced, and I have been informed that one of the beneficiaries under bills introduced by me in the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress departed within six months after his bill was signed by the President; and such, as I stated before, is the experience of every Member in this House who was required to ask for special legislation on this subject.

The committee will act favorably on every bill that can be reached for consideration wherein it is established that the soldier is blind, bedridden, utterly helpless, a paralytic, and painfully or permanently disabled, and where it is further established that his disabilities are not the result of vicious and intemperate habits, and he is unable to perform mental or manual labor to support and maintain himself, and was in the service for a period of ninety days and upward.

There are many survivors of this class of soldiers who are equally and similarly disabled who have not received and never will receive the benefits of increase of pension by special legislation. And why is this so? It is because their cases can not be reached and considered under present practices and existing legislation. Very few citizens make complaint or refuse to pay their taxes and bear their burdens provided they are equal and uniform. The benefits provided for by pension legislation should likewise be equal and uniform amongst the several classes of beneficiaries enumerated in the bill introduced. If this kind of legislation is wrong in principle, then stop the procedure and wipe out the precedent, and revoke and repeal what has been enacted on the subject.

But since it is approved by legislation and the people of this country, and the precedent is established, permit all who may be embraced and enumerated in this class of patriotic and unfortunate citizens to enjoy the benefits and privileges and rewards of equality and uniformity in our pension laws. legislation becomes necessary sometimes to provide for special cases which the generality of general laws will not cover and can not reach. But special legislation on the subject referred to in said bill can not reach all classes and men equally and uniformly by reason of want of time and limitation upon the number of bills that can be considered. The subjects embraced in said bill can, without injustice, inequality, or inconvenience, be included in a general bill and in a general class.

If you pass the legislation referred to, the duties of the Invalid Pension Committee will be lessened and simplified, and all blind men and those who are bedridden, utterly helpless, paralytics, and painfully or permanently disabled, and whose disabilities are not the result of service origin and vicious or intemperate habits, who are honorably discharged, and were in the military or naval service of the United States for ninety days and upward, will be equally, similarly, and uniformly rewarded, as they should be, without exception, omission, favor, or preference.

Liberality and justice to this class of pensioners, enumerated and contemplated in the bill proposed and heretofore referred to, will not embarrass the public treasury. The country is rich and prosperous, and with legislation advocated and in all probability to be enacted on the proposition of a progressive tax on inheritances and incomes, by which large revenues will be collected without inconvenience or discomfort to anyone, the passage of such a general pension bill will add but a trifling additional burden upon the Government during the declining years of the men who may become included within its provisions. The men who will be included in this class of beneficiaries have aided in making this country prosperous and rich, great and united. These questions are not new. Every Congress possibly since the Mexican war heard this discussion in some phase or other.

Little, if anything, can be uttered in behalf of pensions that has not already been said or discussed. Nearly all civilized nations make provision for the pensioning of their surviving soldiery and family or families dependent upon them. It is patriotic, reasonable, and proper that it should be so.

Those who leave their homes, property, and business during the days of war and conflict are justly rewarded by proper and reasonable pensions for their patriotic valor, sacrifice, and risk to which they subjected themselves and loss they may or have sustained to business and property; and this class of men and those in family relations dependent upon them should be re-warded as an incentive to this and future generations to perform military service in the event of conflict with foreign nations or internal strife and dissensions requiring military aid.

For the reasons hereinbefore indicated I urge that the Invalid Pensions Committee favorably report, and that this House without delay enact the bill introduced, as a portion of our pension legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] so much time as he desires.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill carries an appropriation of over $138,000,000 for the payment of pensions to the veteran soldiers and sailors of the country, and it affords a very appropriate occasion to offer some remarks upon our general pension laws.

While the pension policy of the country is very liberal toward those who have made sacrifices for the preservation of our institutions, it is, perhaps, the best safeguard the Government can adopt. If this country should ever be involved in another great war, particularly engaging the land forces, it must depend chiefly upon a volunteer army, and the record it makes in its treatment of those who volunteered in the past to defend our institutions against destruction and overthrow will go far toward inspiring faith and securing volunteers for the purposes of defense in the future. The Government pays more in the way of pensions than all the other countries of the earth combined, and yet it does not pay a dollar that is not justly due to its veteran defenders, and, as a matter of public safety, every the maintenance of a large standing army during times of peace. Our large pension roll enables us to do with a compar-

While the pension policy is liberal and its spirit is just, in the administration of the laws, in order to prevent imposition, the Pension Bureau has established many rules respecting proof of claims that appear somewhat technical, and it is now impossible for many veterans of the civil war to furnish the evidence of the origin of their disabilities that the rules of the Pension Bureau require. In order to meet this situation and provide relief for a vast number of veterans who were unable to make proof of the origin of their disabilities the law of 1890 was passed providing that all persons who served ninety days and over in the civil war and were honorably discharged. on proof of disability without reference to its origin, should receive pensions ranging from $6 to $12 a month. of that war are all now in advanced years. Many of them are totally disabled for the performance of manual labor and are unable to furnish the proof required to connect their disabilities with their Army service. Thousands are destitute and are compelled to subsist upon the small allowance of $12 a month provided under the law of 1890. Numerous veterans of this class have wives to support, and it is a sad spectacle to see a brave and worthy veteran who served his country three or four years honorably and valiantly and whose system may have been poisoned with the germs of disease, now in his declining years, in destitute circumstances, unable to earn anything to support himself, and who is compelled to care for himself and his aged wife upon a pittance of $12 a month.

As a result of this condition many thousands have applied to Congress for relief in the way of private legislation. During the present Congress there have been introduced in both Houses private pension bills to the number of 19,300. House bills have been enacted into law and 1,750 Senate bills, making a total of upward of 5,200, and leaving undisposed of about 14,000 bills. Of these 14,000 bills the bulk of them are for the relief of worthy men; men who are in destitute circum-stances; men who are unable to perform any kind of manual labor, or to earn anything to relieve their wants and the wants of their families; men who have no income excepting, probably, a pension of $12 a month under the law of 1890. A large majority of these applicants firmly believe that their present disabled condition is chiefly the result of their military service, and that fact seems morally probable, yet they can not make the technical proof required by the Pension Bureau. They may have no hospital record; they may be unable to prove actual acute sickness while in the service by two comrades or commissioned officers, and, therefore, they can not avail themselves of the liberality of the general law. Their witnesses may be dead or may have forgotten the facts.

In the House there are two committees engaged most of the time in the examination of private pension bills. Under the rules of the House no bill can be considered upon the floor until it has been referred to the proper committee, investigated, and reported back for action. There have been such an avalanche of private bills during the last few Congresses that the Pension Committees, devoting most of their time to that work, have been utterly unable to investigate the merits of near all of them, and the result has been that only about one-fourth of those that were introduced have been examined and reported The remaining three-fourths-many of them just as meritorious and just as worthy as those that are investigated and acted upon-rest with the committee and expire with the Congress in which they were introduced. The Pensions Committees are composed of able and industrious men, and the work they have done in the investigation of this class of bills has put the Congress and the country under many obligations to them; but under the very best system of examination and consideration possible the private pension policy is largely and necessarily a policy of favoritism, granting that all of the private bills introduced are substantially of the same merit. Five thousand of them are successful and nearly 15,000 are unsuccessful. Some are fortunate and some or unfortunate. Many of the unfortunate ones have as great claims upon the consideration of Congress and upon the gratitude of the country as the fortunate

This policy is so manifestly unjust and unfair that in my opinion there is an imperative need of some general and efficient legislation that will tend to equalize conditions and to put veterans of the civil war as far as possible upon an equal footing, I have done the best I could to secure the consideration of all the private pension bills that I have introduced. I have sucdollar of that money is well invested. I would infinitely rather have a large and liberal pension roll than to have the Government annually appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for I have felt at the close of each session that many worthy applicants who had the right to expect favorable consideration of their bills would necessarily be disappointed because of the lack of time and opportunity to give consideration to their claims.

The Senate passed a bill a few days ago, known as the "Mc-Cumber bill," based chiefly upon the fact of service. It provides that all Union veterans of the civil war who served ninety days and over and were honorably discharged shall, upon arriving at the age of 62 years, be granted a pension at the rate of $12 a month, and upon reaching the age of 70 years the pension shall be increased to $15 a month, and on reaching the age of 75 years the pension shall be further increased to $20 a month, the maximum provided in that bill.

That bill would doubtless afford some relief to a great many people, but it will not meet the requirements of the situation. It is based upon service arbitrarily, and not upon disability. Most all of the applicants for private pensions are men who served faithfully-many during the entire war. They are now destitute of means of support and are so disabled that they can not perform manual labor, and perhaps the majority of them are under 70 years of age. They are drawing now only $12 a month under the law of 1890. The McCumber bill will afford no relief to this class of veterans who are under 70 years of age. The applications for private pensions will continue to be about as great in the future as they have been in the past.

Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me to state, as I understand, the McCumber bill also includes the Mexican

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; the bill includes Mexican war veterans who now are allowed pensions on a service basis at the rate of $12 a month. ,The McCumber bill would give them the maximum of $20 a month, because they are all over 75 years of age. I like that feature of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. It would be a help to the Mexican war veterans.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; very materially.

I introduced a bill in the House a few days ago providing for an increase of the maximum pension rate fixed by the law of 1890. The bill provides that the maximum under that law shall be $24 a month instead of $12, as it now is. If that bill were enacted into law, it would relieve almost all of those who now come to Congress for relief in the way of private legislation. Perhaps a majority of the private bills that are reported increasing pensions fix the rate at $24 a month. If all those who are totally disabled and are receiving $12 a month under the law of 1890 were given $24 a month, there would not be onetenth as many applications for private pensions as there are now. All the soldiers who are in the same physical condition would be placed upon an equal footing and Congress would be able to investigate and act upon all the private bills that might be introduced.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think also that his proposed amendment to the law would work more equitably in getting pensions on the merits of the case rather than by favoritism?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would be infinitely better and more equitable than the present private-pension system. The favoritism under the existing practice is not political or religious, and is in no degree the fault of the Committees on Pensions and Invalid Pensions. It is the fault of the law and the system that has grown up under it.

Mr. OTJEN. The gentleman's proposed amendment to the law would raise all those who are now receiving $12 to $24?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the proposition exactly.

Mr. CROMER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. CROMER. What provision does the gentleman make for the widows? Does he double their pensions?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not make any provision at all. would like to do so, but I think it is wisdom to take up one branch of the subject at a time. I am in favor of increasing the pensions of all widows of soldiers of the civil war, all pensionable widows, to $12 a month. I think $12 a month ought to be the minimum pension for widows.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House has a rule providing that no bill for the increase of a private pension will be considered unless the applicant has been able to establish his right to the maximum pension under the law of 1890 before the Commissioner of Pensions. I desire to impress upon the House the importance of enacting a general law increasing the maximum rate under the law of 1890 to $24 a month and to emphasize the fact that it would relieve Congress of the duty of investigating such an avalanche of private bills. I doubt if there would be a thousand bills for private pensions introduced during an entire Congress under the operation of a law of that kind, and it would bring happiness and comfort to the homes of many thousand veterans in all parts of the United States.

But we are told that it would involve the expenditure of a large additional sum of public money, and it probably would. I have not taken the pains to ascertain how much it would increase the annual appropriation. It would probably increase it fifteen or twenty millions a year; but what if it did? That would only amount to the cost of two modern battle ships. While we are appropriating in the neighborhood of $800,000,000 at every session of Congress to conduct the Government and to carry on various public activities, an increase in the appropriations of fifteen or twenty million dollars as an act of justice to the defenders of the country would not only be justified but applauded by a large majority of the American people. Pensions are granted not as a matter of charity or gratuity, but as a matter of right. When the civil war was on, when the Government was seeking recruits for the upbuilding of its Army, men were given to understand that if they would enlist and assist in preventing the destruction of the Government they should never come to want; that the Government would provide for their widows and children in the event they lost their lives in defense of the flag, and would provide adequate pensions to care for them if they were disabled; so the enactment of laws providing for adequate pensions to care for the destitute and disabled survivors of the Army of the Union is simply a discharge of an obligation founded in justice and gratitude.

Besides, money paid out and expended under a law of that kind would be distributed equitably in all sections of the country. It would go into the hands of the poor, as a rule, who would use it for the necessaries of life, and it would go into immediate circulation, and the business of the country would not be affected by the appropriation in the least. I am earnestly in favor of that kind of a law. I will vote for the McCumber bill, if I can not secure the adoption of a more just and generous pen-The McCumber bill will afford a great deal of relief, but it will not afford adequate relief. The time has come when the country should feel its obligation to adopt such a pension policy as will result in as near justice as possible to all of its veteran soldiers. No pension law can operate with exact justice to all, but it is infinitely better to be more than just to some than to be unjust to many.

The veterans of the civil war are fast passing from the scene of action. They are going to their final reward at such a rate that in a short time but few will remain as reminders of the bloody struggle that was necessary to perpetuate the Union. The declining years of these men ought to be made as comfortable and happy as possible. They should be permitted to enjoy the comforts and blessings of the Government their sacrifices made permanent. I have no sympathy with the criticism of pension laws that is based upon the increase of expenditures. I would rather forego the construction of a battle ship occasionally. I would rather economize in expenditures in other lines than to require the veteran soldiers of the Republic in their declining years to barely eke out an existence on a pittance of eight or ten or twelve dollars a month.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] here. If there is no other gentleman who wishes to occupy time this evening I move that the committee do now rise. I see the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston] is here. Does the gentleman wish to occupy any time to-day?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not to-day. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I renew my motion that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Townsend, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24640, the pension appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SERVICE PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions be, and hereby are, authorized to sit as a joint committee for the purpose of considering Senate bill No. 976, an act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico; and that such joint committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to explain the object of that resolution.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, the reason for the meeting of the joint committee is that the McCumber bill carries in it provisions for civil-war veterans and also for Mexican-war veterans, and, under the rules of the House, the Committee on Invalid Pensions have charge of all pension matters relating to service and disability from service in the civil war, while the Committee on Pensions have matters pertaining to the service and disability from service in all other wars; so that it has been deemed better and wiser that both committees sit as a joint committee, so that whatever action they take in regard to this matter may be written in one bill, without any future legislation in any other line.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that he amend the resolution so that they may sit as one committee instead of as a joint committee.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I accept the suggestion of the Chair, and ask to strike out the word "joint" where it first occurs and insert the word "one," and strike out the word "joint" where it occurs the second time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In this case how would you sign up a report?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The whole committee can select who shall make the report, the same as we do in other committees. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

STURGEON BAY, ILLINOIS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 207.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 207) declaring Sturgeon Bay, Illinois, not navigable water.

navigable water.

Resolved, etc., That so much of the west fork of Sturgeon Bay within the county of Mercer and State of Illinois as lies west of the line between the east half and the west half of the east half of section 25, in township 14 north, range 6 west of the fourth principal meridian, and so much of the east fork of said Sturgeon Bay as lies north of the north line of section 30, in township 14 north, range 5 west of the fourth principal meridian, shall not be deemed navigable waters of the United States, but dams and bridges may be constructed across the same.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 11 and 12 strike out the words "but dams and bridges may be constructed across the same."

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman to explain the need of this resolution.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was made necessary by the fact that a drainage district has been organized under the laws of Illinois for the purpose of reclaiming some 19,000 acres of bottom land at the expense to the owners of the land themselves solely of some $250,000. It is upon the banks of the Mississippi River, near Boston, and they have to procure the money through the issuance of bonds upon the land, forming a mortgage for their benefit. In order to do this and to make the facts as to the unquestioned unnavigability of a little spur, being, in fact, a slough, it was necessary to pass this bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What committee reported this legislation?

Mr. GRAFF. It is reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and reported on the recommendation of the War Department. It is stated in the War Department, which examined this survey, that this is some of the water of the Mississippi River, and the so-called "Sturgeon Bay," or slough, was, in fact, unnavigable.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It does not affect the navigability of the

Mr. GRAFF. It does not affect the navigability of the river in any way, because it is too remote from the channel of the river. I have here the report made to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by General Mackenzie as to the unnavigable character of the river.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Father of life, teach us the lesson of life at this moment of sudden death. Thou art pleased to call him to higher service, to see as he is seen, to know as he is known. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, he is changed, and this corruptible puts on incorruption, and this mortality is clothed with immortality.

We need not pray for him. He comes to Thee in the glad certainties of that larger life. But for ourselves, Father, we pray that our labors may be consecrated to Thee; that we may live to Thy service; that we may go about Thy business; so that when Thou dost call us where we may cease from such labors, we shall enter into the higher service of the sons and daughters of the living God.

We ask it in Him who is immortality and life for us, coming to Thee in the name of Thy well-beloved Son.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, is the power, is the glory, forever and forever.

DEATH OF SENATOR RUSSELL A. ALGER.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of my colleague, Hon. RUSSELL A. ALGER, who died at half past 8 o'clock this morning at his residence in this city.

This is not the time for eulogy. At some future date I will ask the Senate to set aside a day in which to pay fitting tribute to his memory. For the present, I ask the passage of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

Thursday, January 24, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we meet this morning in the shadow of the death of Senator Alger, of Michigan, a man who for more than forty years, as soldier and statesman, has been conspicuous in the service of his country. Our sympathies go out to the bereaved family and the stricken friends, and we most fervently pray that we may live so close to Thee that when our time comes we may be prepared to pass on and take up whatever awaits us in some other world; with faith, and trust, and confidence, and fortitude, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill; and pending that motion, unanimous consent that the general debate upon this bill be closed in fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill, and pending that motion asks unanimous consent that all general debate be closed in fifteen minntes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, no one upon this side has asked any time for general debate so far, but if some Member here should want fifteen minutes I should dislike to be obliged to refuse it to him. The request has not been made yet, but if the gentleman from Michigan could modify his request so as to permit an extension of fifteen minutes' time, should it be required, I think it would be well.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am certainly very willing to yield to any Member on that side, because no one on that side has occupied any time thus far in this debate.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I suggest to the gentleman that he make the time thirty minutes, and then if there is a request here for it we can use it, while if there is not, we will not need the

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. There is no objection to that. The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, that the general debate be closed in or before thirty minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The motion of Mr. Gardner of Michigan was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24640, the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. Townsend in the chair.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to enter upon any extended discussion upon this pension appropriation bill. I think it was quite appropriate that we should have had a speech from my colleague [Mr. Taylor of Ohio] in support of his bill in favor of pensioning the prisoners of war. It was also in the same line that we should have heard from the distinguished Member from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] in support, as I understood him, of the McCumber bill, and also of another bill of his own, in which he proposes to raise the maximum under the act of 1890 from $12 to $24. It was likewise appropriate that my other distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. Grosvenor] should have spoken on the question of the tariff as applicable to this pension bill to show how we are to raise the revenue that goes to make up the sums that we are annually appropriating to pay pensions.

The Government has been very liberal in the matter of paying pensions, especially to the soldiers and the widows and orphan children of the soldiers of the civil war. The total, as I gather it from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, that has been paid on account of the civil war is $3,259,195,360, and the total of all pensions paid since July 1, 1790, as he reports, is $3,459,860,311.33 This speaks well for the Government. Although I am in favor of the continuance of these appropriations for the payment of pensions, I do not think the Government has been illiberal. In the payment of these pensions we have received some of the prosperity that we credit up to the tariff. The appropriations for the payment of pensions generally go to the poor people, and they spend it and it is distributed where it does the greatest good. An appropriation of a few million dollars annually for the rich would do no practical good. They would not probably spend any more money than they do now and it would not go into circulation, and the prosperity that now exists in this country might not be affected.

But I do not propose to pursue this line particularly. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations and on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan], comes back to the old General Order No. 78 to criticise it. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that he unites with me now, as he did last year, to put an end to that discussion by making the principles of that order perpetual. Last year we reenacted, or rather enacted, into law the provisions of General Order No. 78, but did not undertake to make it to continue for all future years. This year we have inserted in the bill the word "hereafter," so that the principles of that order shall extend to all the future years. I do not care to stop now to speak of that which is of the dead past, but the order was originally issued in exact accordance with the statute then existing. The act of June 17, 1890, section 2, expressly provides that such an order might The act of June be issued, and it was so interpreted by the then President of the United States, Mr. Cleveland. I want to say to his credit that when they made so much of this in the political campaign of 1904, this distinguished citizen and ex-President of the United States said publicly during the campaign what I now read:

I have noticed that the Commissioners have merely construed the law so as to make the change

He was referring to Order No. 78-so far as I can see the change is in keeping with the law.

But that is enough to be said on that subject. Now, lest there should be some misapprehension about the effect of the provisions in this bill, which only undertakes to appropriate for nine pension agencies, I wish to say that there is nothing in the bill, as seems to be assumed in the discussion here, undertaking to fix the location of any one of these agencies. The matter is left where it has been ever since the act of March 3, 1885. President has the power to fix the agencies, and he may locate them wherever he pleases, and we are not now necessarily engaged in determining what places shall have the pension agencies. This much I wanted to state. I think there is some misapprehension about what is to become of the clerks at the agencies that are to be discontinued. I understand, and it is the understanding of the Commissioner of Pensions, that they are all under the civil-service rules and are subject to be transferred to Washington or to other agencies. Where agencies are discontinued clerks may be transferred to some other agency or, as the Commissioner states, to the Pension Bureau here in Washington, omitting only to fill vacancies where they occur in the natural course of things.

So that we are not going to do so much harm as would seem. Now, some of them think that I appear here in the character of favoring this because in my own State it is not likely that the pension agency will be discontinued. We are paying in the State of Ohio something over 98,000 pensioners. The exact number is 98,068. It takes several of the agencies in other places to make up that number. The amount of saving to begin with, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions, would be at least $100,000. I think that wherever we can legitimately save, without interfering with the prompt payment of the pensioners, we ought to do it. I have some criticism upon the mode of distributing the payment of these pensions. It will be seen by those who desire to look at it in the report of the hearings that the distribution of the payment of pensions has not been made through the different months of the year at the different agencies.

For instance, in the State of Ohio all pensioners are paid on the 4th of March, the 4th of June, the 4th of September, and the 4th of December. I think the arrangement ought to be at all agencies, whether we have nine or eighteen, that there should be as nearly as possible an equal number of the pensioners paid each month, and in that way there would be some economy, some saving of clerk hire. If the number of pension agencies is reduced to nine, I think by all means the Commissioner, as a matter of economy, ought to arrange, if it is possible to do it under the law, so that at each agency pensioners shall be paid on, say, the 4th of each month in the year—a proper proportion of the pensioners-and then they would not come in together every three months at each agency as they do now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I beg to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his courtesy. I wish at this time to direct for a moment the attention of the House to a matter en-I wish at this time to tirely apart from the subject of pensions. I refer to the very many railroad accidents which have recently occurred and which have directed the attention of the public generally to the subject of appliances which may prevent railway accidents. do this now because of a recent communication which was sent by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Speaker, and which communication has been widely disseminated through the That communication is as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, Washington, January 3, 1907.

To the Scnate and House of Representatives:

The Interstate Commerce Commission is credibly informed that automatic devices for preventing railroad collisions have been so far perfected as to justify thorough experimental tests of their practical usefulness.

The Commission is of the opinion that such tests should be conducted by officials of the Government and at its expense.

The Commission therefore recommends that suitable legislation be promptly enacted authorizing the Commission, or some other official body, to supervise and conduct experimental tests of such safety devices as appear to be meritorious, and that an appropriation be made sufficient to secure the most competent experts and defray the other expenses incident to the project herein recommended.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MARTIN A. KNAPP, Chairman.

It will be seen that the communication itself would seem to suggest that Congress had been slow and needed a little urging from the Commissioners. The truth of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that at the last session of Congress we enacted a joint resolution, which provides as follows:

[Public resolution-No. 46.]

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to investigate and report on the use of and necessity for block signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains in the United States. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to employ persons who are familiar with the subject, and may use such of its own employees as are necessary to make a thorough examination into the matter.

In transmitting its report to the Congress the Commission shall recommend such legislation as to the Commission seems advisable.

To carry out and give effect to the provisions of this resolution the Commission shall have power to issue subpenas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and receive depositions taken before any proper officer in any State or Territory of the United States.

Approved, June 30, 1906.

Under that joint resolution the Interstate Commerce Commis-

Under that joint resolution the Interstate Commerce Commission was authorized to employ persons who were familiar with the subject, to issue subpænas, to take any kind of testimony that it It made no request at the last session of Congress for an appropriation for lack of time between the enactment and adjournment, and no special appropriation was made. Notwith-standing that, on January 3 of this year that Commission sent a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, which letter I have read.

Mr. Chairman, I have not investigated to ascertain who actually directed the sending of this letter to Congress, but I dare say that Chairman Knapp never saw the letter, that Mr. Moseley, the secretary of the Commission, never saw it, and that it was the result of the hysterical expression of opinion of some employee of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of some new member of that Commission. It assumes the necessity of additional legislation without reference to the absolutely controlling legislation which was enacted at the last session conferring upon this Commission complete authority to make the investigation, authority which they say ought now to be given to them or to some other body.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is the law or the statute to which the gentleman refers authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the block-signal system and other devices broad enough to authorize an investigation of all manner of safety devices for the prevention of railroad wrecks? Is it broad enough to cover everything? I got the impression from the gentleman's statement of that statute that it was confined to the block-signal system and devices connected therewith.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. What the Commission in its letter referred to is that it is credibly informed that automatic devices for preventing railroad collisions have been so far perfected as to justify thorough experimental tests of their practical usefulness. The resolution directs them to investigate the block-signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains in the United States. I may say further, Mr. Chairman, that the joint resolution itself, at my request, was prepared in and by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the express purpose of making it broad enough to invest that Commission with the power to investigate all manner of devices and appliances for the control of railway trains to prevent

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The statement the gentleman just read refers to the signal system and automatic devices for the control of railway trains. Are there not safeguards or safety devices in the form, for instance, of improved headlights that may not be classed as devices for the automatic control of railway trains that may merit investigation? And let me ask the gentleman another question: Does he not believe that the Government ought to provide for the appointment of a commission of railway experts to examine into the cause of railroad wrecks and to report exhaustively thereon?

Mr. MANN. Now, if the gentleman will permit, I call his attention again to the joint resolution authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission "to employ persons who are familiar with the subject." The very purpose of the resolution was to permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to employ experts.

Now, I am not calling attention to this for the purpose of crit-I do not wish that to be understood. icising the Commission. I think the letter was sent here through inadvertence. What I wish to call to the attention of the committee and to the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission is this, that the question now is to make an appropriation for the purpose. This letter suggests to the Speaker of the House that the appropriation ought to be made, and I want to call the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission to this fact: There is a method provided by law for asking Congress for money. That method is not by sending a letter to the Speaker of the House by the Commission. The law provides that when any of these departments or bureaus or other agencies of the Government desire an appropriation, they shall submit an estimate of appropriation to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I yield to the gentleman the remaining five

Mr. MANN. They shall submit an estimate of appropriation to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall transmit that estimate to Congress through the Speaker, and the proper method for the Interstate Commerce Commission to obtain this money is by sending to the Secretary of the Treasury an estimate of appropriation, which will be sent to the Speaker and be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which will have jurisdiction of the subject. This letter which has been sent directly from the Commission is referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has no jurisdiction to make an appropriation, and I am seeking to direct the attention of the Commission to the proper method of obtaining an appropriation, so that this investigation may be made, and I hope that when that estimate comes before the Committee on Appropriations and the House the appropriation will be made, the investigation will be made, and that we will acquire knowledge which will aid us in so legislating as to prevent these great disasters, unnecessary collisions, and other dangers incident to railway travel.

Mr. ESCH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. ESCH. Did the joint resolution passed at the last session fix a time limit in which they were to report?

Mr. MANN. It did not.

Mr. ESCH. So the power granted by the joint resolution will be continued?

Mr. MANN. It is continuous. The authority is not limited by time, and practically not limited by anything else in this line. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains under the order of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he desires, on behalf of that side of the House, any additional time?

Mr. SULLIVAN. There has been no request for time on this

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I would suggest that general debate be closed, and the bill be read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $137,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately: And provided further, That hereafter the age of 62 years and over shall be considered a permanent specific disability within the meaning of the pension laws.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, Loffer an appendment, which I

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "laws," insert:

"And provided further, That hereafter any widow of a soldier of the civil war applying under the general law for a pension as such widow shall not be required to prove that her husband's death was the result of his Army service."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman from Massachusetts anticipated my action in making the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve it. Mr. TAWNEY. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that while there is no doubt, under the rule of the House, that this amendment is subject to the point of order, yet the injustice under the present law, as applied to a widow who is seeking a pension, is so apparent that upon consideration I sincerely hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. We ought to deal liberally with old soldiers. In his old age, in his declining years, we ought to protect and support him as he protected and supported our flag and our country in those trying and perilous days of danger and of need. In our greatness, our prosperity, and our strength we must not forget those who were our defenders in our weakness and our poverty and our need. soldiers of the civil war are all old men. A grateful nation should see to it that our brave defenders in their old age are provided with the comforts of life and that poverty and want should never gain admittance to any old soldier's home. We should not, and I believe we will not, adjourn without passing some beneficial and, I believe, needed legislation for the benefit of the old soldier.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is generally understood that we are going to have some legislation at the present session that will remedy, at least to a considerable extent, the injustice of the pension laws as they apply to the old soldier himself; but in the bill that is now under consideration by the Pension Com:nittee of this House, and which I understand will soon be reported favorably, there is nothing that applies to the pension of the widow.

Mr. Chairman, there is some reason why the pension of a soldier himself should depend upon his ability to prove the incurrence of the disability for which he seeks a pension in the line of duty when in the service, but that reason does not extend to the widow. We owe the obligation to the widow to give her a pension because she is the widow of a soldier to whom we are indebted. The widow is just as dependent, her loss just as great, and her suffering just as severe, if the soldier died of causes other than those which originated in the service, as though he were killed upon the field of battle. The injustice often comes in refusing pensions to widows who are absolutely worthy under all circumstances, but who are not able to prove that the cause of the husband's death was his service in the Army. Let me illustrate:

Suppose there are two soldiers. One of them served in the civil war for six months and the other one, like the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] who has charge of this bill, served over four years. They each are disabled on account of that service, and one of them (we will say the one who served four years) on account of those very disabilities may have been unable to provide for the maintenance of his widow in case of his death. The other one who is not disabled, perhaps, to the same extent, who served only six months, has been enabled to provide for his widow. They die to-day. The one who served six months and who has acquired property dies as a result of disability incurred in the line of duty. The other soldier, who is poor, and who served four years, we will say to illustrate, is struck by lightning.

Now, there are the two widows. The one man who served six months in the service has left his widow an income of $3,000 a year; the other one, who is poor, but who gave the most service to his country, and who on account of disabilities received in that patriotic service has been unable to work and lay up money for the benefit of his surviving wife, leaves an income to his widow of $300 a year. Now observe the injustice. our present law, Mr. Chairman, the widow of the soldier who served four years could not get any pension at all, and the widow of the soldier who served only six months, and who has much more of an income, will be able under the general law to get a pension of $12 per month.

This amendment, if adopted, would do away with that in-quality, with that injustice, with that wrong. We ought not, equality, with that injustice, with that wrong. under any circumstances, compel a widow to base her pension upon the fact that she must prove that her husband died from a disability incurred in the service. It is not right, it is not fair, and it is not just. There is not any reason for it. It appeals to us, it seems to me—and it ought to appeal to us—to give the pension in all cases because she is the widow of a soldier and because the soldier is dead. Those two facts ought to be sufficient to entitle her to a pension.

Under that law it would not give all widows, if this amendment were adopted, a pension of $12 per month, because under the general law the widow who is married to the soldier after the 19th day of March, 1886, only gets $8 a month pension. But it would enable all of the widows of soldiers of the civil war to secure a pension. And it seems to me that we can not do justice to the old soldier; we can not do justice to his widow, left poor perhaps for the reason that her husband gave the best part of his life to the service of his country, unless we eliminate from the law that one thing that makes it necessary for her to prove the old soldier died as a result of his Army service. I hope the gentleman will not insist, therefore, upon his point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will insist upon his point of order for reasons already stated. Further than that, I would like to say to the Members of the House that, while I do not speak by authority, I think I am safe in saying that there will be an abundance of opportunity for amendments of this character to a bill wherein they will be germane, and in the shadow that now hangs over this room, as well as in the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol, I hope the debate will not be prolonged on questions that gentlemen know are clearly out of order as touching this bill, but will wait for a more favorable opportu-

Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just a moment. This not to be taken in any sense as a reflection either upon the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] or upon what he said, not in the

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman will realize that practically all the legislation in these provisos that there are in this bill now and other legislation has been had and brought about by having them put upon the appropriation bill. I realize that this is subject to the point of order; but nobody denies the justice of I believe no one will contend for that, and it is only following a practice that has been in vogue heretofore-to put provisos of this kind on the appropriation bill. If the committee had put it on there is no doubt no one would have made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of order?

Mr. SULLIVAN. I do.
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.
The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIKMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1908, $700,000. And each member of each examining board shall, as now authorized by law, receive the sum of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or a less number shall be examined on any one day, and $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on such day: Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day, no fewer than twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and that if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made: Provided further, That no fee shall be paid to any member of an examining board unless personally present and assisting in the examination of applicant: And provided further, That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall be open to inspection and copy by the applicant or his attorney, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in securing the introduction of a bill or the passage thereof through Congress granting pension or increase of pension: and any person who shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain any compensation for such services shall be deemed guilty of an offense, be fined not exceeding 5000 or

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon the last proviso:

Provided further, That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered, etc.

It is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order the gentleman

Mr. MURPHY. That it is new legislation and changes exist-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to ask what the point of order is the gentleman makes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order, on page 3, commencing at line 11, to the end of the paragraph, that it is a change of existing law and new legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there is any new legislation in this paragraph. has been carried for some time as it is now in the bill, and therefore is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that it has been carried in the same words?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. In that case the Chair would be disposed to hold that this is merely a reiteration of the law in the same language.

Mr. MURPHY. I do not understand that that makes any difference.

Mr. TAWNEY. This is existing law. It might be omitted from this act entirely and the limitation would exist nevertheless, because of the fact that it was existing law

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have not the decision of the Comptroller with me; but the Comptroller has held in cases where limitations are put into an appropriation bill that do not include the word "hereafter" only apply to the fiscal year for which the appropriations are made. I do not know that that would be the case here. One thing, however, is very certain. It is either new legislation or it has no place in the bill. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the provision, I do not see what the gentleman would want to keep it in the bill for if it is already the law.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman I would say that the matter of expunging all from line 9 to line 22 was brought up in the subcommittee. that has been carried for years in the appropriation bill, and I think with reason, for it defines the purpose of the House clearly from year to year that all may know what the law is and avoid not only infractions, but multitudes of inquiries as to what rights under certain conditions pensioners have. This is simply notice given to the public from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] give the Chair information on the decision of the Comptroller to which he referred?

Mr. Chairman, I can not refer you to the de-Mr. MANN. cision, although I can easily ascertain it, of course. But the Comptroller has held on a provision like this that where a limitation is put upon an appropriation bill in language similar to this, not including the word "hereafter," that it was a limitation upon the appropriation merely for the fiscal year and did not enact law which would control thereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion, under the statements of the gentleman from Michigan and under the rule, that this is but a reenactment or republication of language that had been used heretofore and was existing law before the enactment of this provision. Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question in regard to the proviso on page 3, that reads:

That the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically state the rating which in their judgment the applicant is entitled to, and the report of such examining surgeons shall specifically and accurately set forth the physical condition of the applicant, each and every existing disability being fully and carefully described.

Now, as a matter of fact, the examining surgeons do make a rating, do they not, of so many dollars, which they recommend as the pension to allow the applicant? Is it true or not true that as a matter of fact the Pension Department disregards the rating fixed by the examining board and makes a new rate dependent wholly on the facts set forth in the examination?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman I would say that his answer is correct in part and in part incorrect. The law provides that each pensioner, under certain conditions, shall ordinarily be examined by the local pension board in or near his place of residence, and that the board shall give a rating in accordance with their judgment. It may be cumulative upon several or it may be upon one disability. That rating, with all that pertains to his examination, is sent here to Washington and is subject to review by the medical board in the Pension Bureau. That that board of review is guided very largely by the examination of the local pension board I have no doubt; that they are called upon to follow it explicitly and without variation I have no reason to think.

As a matter of fact, I think my experience, Mr. HINSHAW. at least, would justify the assertion that the mere rating of eight or ten or twelve dollars per month which the local pension examining board makes has no validity or effect, has no bearing whatever upon the ultimate rating determined here. At least, I have been informed that the board of review accept only the facts set forth specifically as to disabilities the applicant may have and disregard the rating entirely. Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Nebraska will permit an interruption, this proviso is merely declaratory and intended, I suppose, to authorize the local examining board to recommend in an advisory capacity the conditions of the applicant. It is not mandatory upon the board of review in Washington, the medical board, or upon the Pension Bureau. It is not conclusive They have the right to follow or not to follow the recommendations and the suggestions of the local examining surgeons as to the rate of pension to be allowed. I do not know what the practice may be as to whether the Bureau follows the recommendations of the local board, and I do not know anything in the law that makes it mandatory upon the Pension Bureau or the medical board in the Pension Bureau here in Washington to accept the advice or recommendations of the examining boards, but it seems to me impractical to require the Bureau to accept and follow the recommendations of the local board as conclusive.

Mr. HINSHAW. I so understand it, and I should like to have this amended in some way to make it of greater force.

Mr. SOUTHARD. That would be impracticable for this reason: The local board is not charged with the determination of disabilities, as to whether they are pensionable or not. That must of necessity come before the board of review. Your local boards examine a man to determine his condition, and they rate him for disabilities. Then the matter comes before the board of review in the determination of what disabilities found by the local board are pensionable.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand that very clearly, but I find this difficulty—I meet it with the board and I meet it with the soldier. He says: "Why, the board rated me at $12."

Mr. SOUTHARD. You meet that difficulty with the soldier because the soldier does not understand it.

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; but the examining boards themselves do not understand that. They think their rating has some force with the Commissioner.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not think they understand that. think very often the soldier gets that impression from the board of examining surgeons.

Mr. HINSHAW. And the difficulty with the board of examining surgeons is that they fail to give all the symptoms of disease or disability which the soldier may have in a specific manner, relying upon their recommendation of a rating.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It is true that the board of review rely as they have a right to do, perhaps, more on the description of the disabilities given by the medical board than upon their determination. They may rely more or less, but the fact is that the local boards make the examination. They determine what the disabilities of the applicant are. Then the Pension Department, with the aid of the reviewing board, determines what of those disabilities are pensionable, and that is a necessary part of the system.

Mr. HINSHAW. Undoubtedly that is correct.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last This House has frequently heard suggested the proposition to make the rates of the local board obligatory on the Department. The difficulty of carrying out such a rule is that you may take three different counties and let them examine the same man for the same disability, and one will rate him at $17, another at $24, and another at $30; each board will describe his symptoms and condition exactly the same, but put a different construction on the rate; and therefore it has been found necessary to have some central authority that could take the different ratings and equalize them. Otherwise in one county all the pensioners would be $30 men, in another county there would be hardly anybody over $8, depending upon the peculiar opinions of the local board.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me on this proposi-Mr NORRIS tion that the law as it now is does not require, and, really, I think it ought not to require, the board here to follow the local board and take their opinion as conclusive. Now, the law requires that the local board shall describe the disability, and it also requires that the local board should say how much, in their judgment, the pensioner ought to have for that disability. Now, then, if the opinion of the board that the pensioner ought to have $17 a month is not substantiated by the description of his disability in the body of their report, it would be natural that the reviewing board would say that the conclusion of the local board was not sustained by the statement of facts which they

Every lawyer when he makes a plea and adds a prayer to it knows that his prayer must be consistent with the facts which he alleges in his plea. He could make a prayer for more, but he could not get any more than the facts recited in his plea would sustain. An examining board that simply said that a man shall get a certain pension for a certain disability and has not stated the facts in the body of the report upon which they could reasonably be based has not made plain to the reviewing board that the pensioner ought to have the amount they say he ought to have.

I think the law would be improved if we eliminated from it the compulsory part of making the local board give its opinion as to what he ought to have and let them state the facts that they find fully, and not draw any conclusions from them, because the reviewing board must draw the conclusion from the facts stated in the examination as to whether it will bear up and bear out the conclusion that the local board has reached.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think this discussion is proceeding without considering the authority of the board. There is no statute as to these examining boards, prescribing their duties and declaring what they shall do; there is no statute directing their conduct at all. All that they do is done by in-struction of the Commissioner. I think he could abolish all the examining boards in the country, if he chose to do so, by an order at once and procure the testimony of the man's disability in any manner he would prescribe which might be satisfactory to himself. Any soldier could appear before him, bringing with him the testimony of the witnesses and prove his disability, and prove his case at the Bureau, if the Commissioner has time to hear it. The appointment of boards is like the appointment of the medical board in his Bureau. It is merely for the purpose of examining the condition of the applicant and ascertaining what it is. The law gives the pension when the disability is proven to the Secretary. So the whole discussion about the duties of the local examining board and the manner in which they shall make their examination and report is of no value here. I think there is no statute directing the Commissioner himself how he shall hold the examination. The law is simply that the pension shall be granted upon due proof of existing disability, and the Commissioner himself has made the regulations concerning the manner of the proof, the degree of it, and the sufficiency of it. All of this discussion might as well be abandoned for the purposes of this bill. It is a vicious practice any way to force general legislation into an appropriation bill. This patchwork of pension law embarrasses nearly every applicant, and it has been made by amendments authorized in appropriation bills. For that reason I think all this discussion might be abandoned at this time.

Mr. BANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, on page 3, insert the following:
"Provided, however, That all soldiers of the civil war who enlisted in the military service of the United States during the civil war, or who held a commission from the governor of any State to serve in the service of the United States Army during the civil war, and who were captured by Confederate forces and confined in Confederate prisons before having been mustered into such service, shall be entitled to the benefits of all laws on the subject of pensions that those mustered into such service are entitled to."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is contrary to existing law

that that is contrary to existing law.

Mr. BANNON. I will ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order

Mr. SULLIVAN. May I inquire how much time the gentleman intends to consume?

Mr. BANNON. Possibly two or three minutes.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Very well, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BANNON. Mr. Chairman, the object in offering that amendment at this time is to put before Congress a great injustice that has been imposed upon certain soldiers of the civil war who reside in the States which during that war were known as the "border States." I have in my mind the case of Thomas Ross, who enlisted in the military service of the United States on September 15, 1861, and was given a commission by the governor of West Virginia to recruit a company for service in the civil war. He recruited his company, gathered his men together, all under a commission duly issued and with due authority. He was ordered to repair with his company to Guyandotte, W. Va., and while there under the orders and directions of officers of the Army awaiting the arrival of the mustering officer, who was to come on November 11, was captured by Jenkins's cavalry of Confederate troops on the night of November 10. About forty-five of the men of his command were also taken as prisoners of war at the same time. They were tied together by ropes and marched overland, a distance of 278 miles, to Richmond. They were scantily clad and were compelled to tramp from 22 to 46 miles each day upon rations hardly sufficient to sustain life. During one day these men were compelled to wade across a very rapid and cold stream ninety-two times, the depth varying from 2 to 3 feet, and being about 30 yards in width. Ross was confined in Libby prison from November 22, 1861, to December 24 of the same year, and was then sent to Salisbury, N. C., and finally paroled and reported at Camp Chase, Ohio, September 23, 1862. On December 31, 1862, he became an exchanged prisoner of war. hardships endured by Captain Ross and his band of patriots were as severe as those suffered by any of the soldiers on either side.

These facts all appear in the proof filed with H. R. 12105, providing for the relief of this man, which measure has passed this House and is now with the Senate Committee on Military Af-These men were not mustered into the military service of the United States, their muster having been made impossible by reason of their capture by the Confederate command, and consequently their names are not borne on the rolls and they are not entitled to pension; still it is no more than right that those soldiers should be given the same benefits that are given to those who were actually mustered into the military service, because their intentions were just as patriotic as the intentions of the men who were mustered into the military service, and their service was just as patriotic, although it was in a military prison of the enemy and not in the field and in battle. They were brave men. Some of them came from West Virginia and some from Lawrence County, Ohio, and the soldiers from this region were as conspicuous for their gallantry and valor as those The Senate committee, I have no doubt, will recogof any land. nize the justice of the special act I introduced mustering Ross into the service, as some of its members came from this very region, and they can not but appreciate the injustice done this His widow, who was his wife during the events I have described, ought to have a pension, and his sons are entitled to have his name inscribed on the roll of honor; but it seems to me that in the proposed general legislation the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions thinks we are to have on this subject Congress ought to take notice of the great injustice that is done these veterans, these soldiers who served months and months in military prisons and who suffered worse than those who served on the field of battle, and if this amendment to the appropriation bill is to go out on a point of order they should hereafter be given the recognition that is justly due them. Not only Ross but his comrades who suffered with him and all others similarly situated ought to be justly dealt with. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not insist upon his point of order, but if he does, I trust the Committee on Invalid Pensions will investigate this subject at an early day, and report a measure containing the provisions of the amendment I have just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of nine agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $36,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 22, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "eighteen;" and in line 23 strike out the word "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventy-two."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the right to the floor to speak to his amendment. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to have the gentleman's substitute read. Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the paragraph and the amendment now under consideration, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the paragraph just read and the amendment offered thereto the following:

"For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the effect of that?

Mr. TAWNEY. It abolishes them all except the one at Washington.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the merits or demerits of this proposition were substantially discussed while the gentleman from Michigan had the floor yesterday, and I do not propose to take up very much of the time of the committee now in discussing my amendment. The pension agents that now perform the duties of their office are eighteen in number. Of course the provision in the bill is a simple proposition on its face to refuse to appropriate for any but nine of them. will not of itself prevent the other nine pension agents from going into the Court of Claims and recovering their salaries.

The law on the subject is as follows:

The law on the subject is as follows:

The President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions whenever in his judgment the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require, but the number of pension agencies in any State or Territory shall in no case be increased hereafter so as to exceed three, and no such agency shall be established in addition to those now existing in any State or Territory in which the whole amount of pensions paid during the fiscal next preceding shall have not exceeding the sum of $500,000.

Now, I submit that refusing to appropriate, as Congress has a perfect right to do, for the payment of nine pension agents will not abolish the other nine pension agencies.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has not the President the power under existing law to reduce the number of pension agencies and consolidate the eighteen into nine?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I have very serious doubts upon that question, but I express no opinion; but if the President has such power, then my proposition is that the President ought to be allowed to exercise that power without any advice from the Congress

Mr. SULLIVAN. Will the gentleman allow a question? Mr. DALZELL. Yes. Mr. SULLIVAN. Suppose the President did exercise that power, would the gentleman still contend that these agents who had been dropped would go to the Court of Claims and sue for their salary?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all; if the President has the power to abolish the agencies and did abolish the agencies the appropriation would fail, and there would be no necessity for its expenditure. But if there is to be an abolition of nine pension agencies, it either belongs to the President of the United States, who has not exercised the power, without any advice from Congress, or it belongs to Congress, and if Congress undertakes to do it there is a proper and manly and open way to do it, and that is not by absolutely withholding one-half of the amount necessary to pay the salaries of these eighteen agencies. If nine agencies are going to be abolished, and it is the will of Congress that they shall be abolished, then Congress ought to have something to say about which of the nine agencies shall be abolished. Suppose we appropriate only money enough to pay nine pension agents. Which nine pension agents are to be paid? Who is going to decide the question and upon what grounds? Why, it was suggested here yesterday that the reason for the proposed abolition of these nine agents was that it was in the interest of economy. Well, even if that be conceded, then I submit that they ought to be abolished or consolidated in accordance with some well-known and not an arbitrary rule. Why, for example, take the two agencies, one at each end of the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. One pays out every year $6,000,000 and the other pays out $7,000,000. What reason is there, other than an arbitary reason, why one of those agencies should be abolished and its power conferred upon the other? Now, my proposition is this, that if we are going to have a consolidation of these eighteen agencies into nine we ought to have the right to say which of the nine agencies shall survive, and in accordance with what rule and what policy those nine agencies shall be selected; and therefore it seems to me it is only fair that we should continue a system which is of long standing, which has been established by the President of the United States, having regard both for the governmental interests and the interests of the soldiers all over the country and the convenience of the soldiers all over the country. heard no word from the President of the United States as to his dissatisfaction with the existing system; we have heard no word from anyone except this Pension Committee, and there is nothing on the face of this bill that gives this House any information as to how this consolidation is going to be made. Who is going to make it? Upon what rule is it going to be Whatever there is that relates to the subject we have to gather from the report of the committee and from remarks made upon the floor of the House. Now, I submit that it is unfair to ask Congress to take a step in the direction of the establishment of a new policy simply upon a provision in an appropriation bill which refuses to appropriate for nine pension agents who are now in office, established by the President of the United States by virtue of the law and whose office is not sought to be interfered with by Congress in a direct man-

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I was not present during the consideration of this subject on yesterday. I was engaged in the preparation of the sundry civil appropriation bill. wish to say a word as to the purpose of the committee in making this recommendation to the House for the appropriation of only one-half of the pension agencies which we now have.

In the consideration of this question it was first proposed to do what I think ought to be done—that is, to reduce the num-ber of pension agencies from eighteen to one, and that one located here in the capital city, in the building occupied by the Bureau of Pensions. I am informed that if all of these agencies were consolidated into one, the clerks that are now performing this service would be reduced from 435 to 235, and that accommodations can be provided for these clerks in the Pension Bureau here in the city of Washington. This provision, if it becomes a law, will not go into effect until July 1 next, which will give the head of the Bureau ample time to adjust himself to the new conditions. The committee, in not appropriating for more than half the number of agencies we now have instead of reporting an appropriation for only one, did so because it was the belief of the committee that the opposition that would be aroused in the House by the influence of eighteen Members—or Members from eighteen States having these pension agencies— would be so powerful that it would be impossible to effect any reform whatever. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, the committee felt justified in taking a half loaf, inasmuch as it seemed impossible to obtain a whole loaf.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell] asks who is going to make this consolidation. The same official that created these pension agencies will make the consolidation. There is no fear on the part of any man here as to the fact that the consolidation will follow the action of Congress appropriating only half as much or even appropriating for only one agency. It will result in the Executive consolidating these agencies. He has the power to create and therefore has the power to abolish or

Mr. SOUTHARD. Will any material inconvenience result to the pensioners by reason of the change?

Mr. TAWNEY. Absolutely no inconvenience at all. Now, it was at first suggested in the consideration of this question that the pensioners on the Pacific coast might be seriously inconvenienced in consequence of the delay in securing their pensions. The Commissioner of Pensions made it very clear that after their first payment they would receive their pensions just three months from that date, as they are receiving them now. The only difference would be the delay in transmitting the check from Washington to the Pacific coast in the first instance. There might be two or three days' delay, but after that the pension check will reach the pensioner, not only on the Pacific coast, but throughout the United States, with the same regularity every three months that he receives it now. We are paying a large number of pensions to pensioners residing in foreign countries. They receive their pensions every three months. Of course, when they first went abroad there was some delay in the payment of the first pensions, incident to the time consumed in the carrying of the checks, but after that there was no inconvenience, nor any delay.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Another question. What would be the saving?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has expired. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed until he concludes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. The saving to the Government would be, in round numbers, $300,000.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Per annum?

Mr. TAWNEY. Per annum, by the consolidation into one The saving to the Government would be, in

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question before he passes to the other point? As I understand it, pensioners all over the country now are paid at the same time?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; they are not. They are paid in different months at different agencies, and on the same day at different agencies. Now, the plan would be this: If the agencies were all consolidated into one agency, the Commissioner of Pensions would then arrange to have a part of those paid in one month and part in another month, so that the clerks will be employed the year round in this service, and the force of clerks now employed in the agencies would be reduced from 435 to 235 at least. We would save $4,500 rent for the agency in the city of New York. We would also save the salaries of seventeen of these agents, which salaries amount to $4,000 each, making a total saving of $102,500.

Mr. GILBERT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT]?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly. Mr. GILBERT. My question is this: I understood the gentleman to say that the reduction in the clerical force would be from 435 to 235, but I understood the gentleman further to add that the 200 that would be discharged would be distributed round among the different Departments of the Government, so that the net amount that it is contemplated saving will not, in fact, be saved.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman from Kentucky did not hear me say that these 200 clerks that would no longer be needed in the agencies would be distributed among the Departments here. Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. That seems to be the general

Mr. TAWNEY. That statement was undoubtedly made during the debate, and I want to say the basis for it is the common practice in such cases. But instead of going to the eligible list roll in the office of the Civil Service Commission, if the Interior Department wanted any more clerks or had authority to appoint more clerks, these clerks, or some of them, might be detailed from the agency to the Department to do the work and take the places of men who would otherwise be selected from the eligible roll for positions. It would not increase the number of clerks in the Interior Department beyond the authority which the Department has under existing law for the appointment of clerks. It could not be done, because they can not appoint any more than the law authorizes them to appoint.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that Members of Congress in whose State these agencies may exist are reluctant to see them go, are reluctant to give them up; but, in view of the fact that we can by this means save to the Government in round numbers, $300,000 a year, and, as the Commissioner stated to the committee, improve the administration of this service, it certainly seems to me that it was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to take such action as would bring this matter to the attention of the House, in the hope, at least, that the House might concur in the judgment of the committee and effect this saving and improve the administration of this service.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Do you appropriate for the salaries of these 200 clerks that will not be needed, notwithstanding the abolishment of these agencies?

Mr. TAWNEY. We will amend the bill. Following the amendment, if it is adopted, the gentleman in charge of the bill will offer an amendment reducing the appropriation for the clerks in these agencies on the basis I have stated. That is in the following paragraph.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe in the legislation suggested in the bill, nor do I believe this method of doing away with the pension agencies which are necessary, and which can be abolished if not necessary, is wise and needful. I certainly do not concur in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, which will abolish all agencies and transfer everything to the city of Washington. The method of paying pensions which has been in vogue so many years is eminently satisfactory to the old soldier. It allows many of them to go in person and get their pensions. It is costing but very little.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman from Maine permit a question right there? Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. You say it permits the old soldier to go into the pension agency and get his pension. Do you mean to say he gets it in cash or its equivalent?

Mr. POWERS. He gets his check.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it not be more convenient to let the old soldier have his check from this agent handed to him by the letter carrier or the rural free-delivery carrier, saving him the trouble of going there and getting it?

Mr. POWERS. If it has to be sent a thousand or more miles it may save him weeks. It is infinitely better to let him get it when it is due.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. POWERS. I have only five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I know the gentleman does not want to mislead the House. Now, as a matter of fact, the pensioner is not allowed to go into the agency and get his check. He can not do it now under the rules governing the administration of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. POWERS. Where does the gentleman find that statute? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am a pensioner, and I have been in the office of the pension agent the day when the pensions were due, and the pension agent told me the check for my pension would have to go by mail; that that was a rule of the office. I do not know whether it is the rule of all pension agencies, but it certainly is the rule of the pension agency at Detroit.

Mr. POWERS. I have never heard of such a practice as that; but either way it could only be a very short time. Now as to this saving by having 235 clerks to do this work instead of 435; I do not believe that there will be a saving of a dollar. Why does the gentleman contend that some of the clerks down here can do the business that are now in the employ of the Pension Bureau?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.
Mr. POWERS. How, then, was the saving to be effected?
Mr. TAWNEY. I said that 235 of the clerks now employed in the pension agencies would possibly be detailed here to Washington to do the work, and the remainder of the 435 could be dispensed with.

Mr. POWERS. You think that 235 could then do the work than 435 are now doing. Now, sir, I believe that a careful examination will show that the average clerk in Washington does not do two-thirds of the work that he will do in any other office outside, and that it costs more in every way to have anything done here than it does at any other place. Therefore, this talk about saving money, in my judgment, has no foundation in fact. The present condition is satisfactory. Thirty years ago a Dem-The present condition is satisfactory. Thirty years ago a Democratic Congress had a bill here to consolidate all the pension agencies and pay from Washington. That bill was advocated by Mr. Hewitt, of New York, and a Democratic Congress said: "We will have no such consolidation. We will let the old soldier be paid from somewhere near his home." Now, it is true the abolition of the number of agencies proposed in the bill would get rid of nine agencies that cost $36,000. In these days of wonderful retrenchment, when we are voting money by millions for salaries and everything else, we must take away this convenience for the old soldier to save the pittance of $36,000. I myself do not believe any such legislation is called for. I have not seen it recommended or advised by the President or by any Department. I am glad the gentleman came out squarely and told us that the reason why there was no proposition to abolish all the agencies and concentrate everything here was that they feared that the interests of the Representatives on this floor where the eighteen agencies were located would be sufficiently strong to defeat the bill, and hence they hoped to accomplish in this indirect way and by nonappropriation in detail what they could not hope to accomplish in a direct way.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine is mistaken as to the pensioner being authorized to step into the agency and get his pay. All are paid by check.

Mr. POWERS. I said I might be mistaken about that, but that it made very little difference.

Mr. HULL. But, Mr. Chairman, that is a small part of the objection to this method of legislation. There are now eighteen agencies distributed over the country. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] says the pensioners can be paid as promptly from one office as from eighteen. I deny that proposition. There are, in one agency with which I am familiar, as many as 2,000 vouchers returned to the pensioners for correction each payment. If you abolish the agency near home, it takes a longer time for the voucher to go out and be returned, and delays by that much, at least, the receipt of the money by the But if it is proposed, in the interest of economy, to consolidate the agencies, it should be done on a bill that will give Congress the power to legislate deliberately upon it, and to know all the facts. If nine of them are to be abolished, I frankly confess I would say "abolish the other nine, too, and have one payment in Washington, but I am not willing to favor that until we can have more facts before us than we can obtain in this way. My own judgment is that the trifling saving that might be made by abolishing all these agencies would be more than offset by the trouble in the correction of vouchers and the returning of them to the pensioners, and having them go back and forth, thereby delaying the payment of pensioners. is no doubt that a smaller force of clerks can make these payments if they are consolidated in one office, but the delay in the making of the payments, I submit to the gentleman from Minnesota, is not simply on the first payment, but will come on every payment all through the year in every agency on account of faulty vouchers and the time that it takes to correct and return them. It is a small sum in comparison with the vast amount of money that is needed to pay pensions. The Congress of the United States has always been desirous of accommodating itself as far as it could to the wants of the pensioners, and to my mind the only justification we can have for a departure from this course is for the Congress, on a separate bill, with full information, to legislate intelligently upon it. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, if the Government could save the amount of $300,000 a year, as suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney], there might be some reason for this legislation, even upon an appropriation bill; but the contention is that this amount of money can be saved by having the work done in Washington. My experience here has not extended over a great many years, but in those few years I have seen nothing done in Washington more cheaply than it can be done elsewhere in the country. The agency at Topeka, Kans., is to-day paying pensions at the rate of 40 cents per man. I doubt if the consolidated agencies, all located here in one office, can pay for 75 cents per man. In addition to that, the clerks doing this work now out in the country, of whom I understand there are about 400, are, many of them, settled in their from the minority.

own homes. They live more cheaply there than they can live in Washington. They are not now knocking at the doors of Congress for shorter hours and more pay out in Topeka, nor out in Pittsburg, Pa., nor elsewhere in the country; but if you move that additional number of men to Washington, you at once increase the amount of their expense without increasing the amount of work they do or their capacity to do work. It has happened that in the city of Topeka, where the largest agency in the country exists, young men, college students, have been called in on days when there is a great amount of work to be done to assist in that work. They are not put on the regular rolls, they have no intention of becoming Government employees, and yet in stress of business they have done the work without being put on the regular rolls. If you put a man on the pay roll for one day here in Washington in one month, he will want two days the next month, and the next month he will be found ousting a regular employee of the Government.

Mr. SULLIVAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly, Mr. SULLIVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he favors the consolidation of the nine agencies but opposes the consolidation of all of them?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not favor the consolidation of the nine. I favor the plan under which we have been operating all these years. I may be pardoned, Mr. Chairman, if I say, in passing and in further answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that effort to make this a political question comes with but little force. This was attempted on yesterday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan]. All of these employees, with the exception of some eighteen men, are under the civil service and are in no way affected by party action. I can not see how party interest is in any way conserved by either the abolition or maintenance of these agencies. It would seem that the picking for the Democracy was getting rather short when it becomes necessary to attack the maintenance of these pension agencies on political grounds. I sincerely hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will not prevail and the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail.

It is not successfully denied that the veterans will be inconvenienced by the consolidation contemplated here. Every convenience for their benefit should be maintained. These agencies that were established to help in the distribution of their quarterly pensions should not at this time be abolished or consolidated into one at Washington.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words on this subject. The Commissioner of Pensions says that if the nine agencies are abolished it would be a saving of a little over $100,000. I fear that he has not taken into account or made an estimate of the probable additional expense that will made an estimate of the probable additional expense that will necessarily come in the consolidation of these agencies. Take, for instance, the agency at Milwaukee. We pay no rent there. If that agency is abandoned and consolidated with the agency at Chicago, we all know that the public buildings at Chicago are overcrowded already, and that we shall have to rent additional room or buildings to accommodate the enlarged agency, and we all know that rent in Chicago is high. So that in this one instance there will be but a very little saving.

Now, I see from the figures given that the average expense of paying these pensions is about 50 cents per pensioner. committee is justified if it can save in any way $100,000, or any less sum, if it can be properly done, if it can be done without sacrificing the convenience of the pensioner or putting him to additional expense. If not, it is a saving only at the cost of the pensioner. These men are growing old, and the facility by which they collect these pensions should be made easier and not I believe that if any of these agencies are to be abandoned it is fairer and more proper to abandon all of them, if it can be done without injury or inconvenience to the pensioner, as is claimed by the honorable gentleman in charge of this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make an inquiry first whether the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Gardner] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman The CHAIRMAN. It is pending?

the gentleman from Pennsylvania is first in order.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say that I understand the gentleman from Michigan offered and had read the substitute on his own responsibility, and not by direction of the Committee on Appro-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman from Ohio has raised that question. The amendment was offered after consultation with the chairman of the general committee, and the ranking member of the subcommittee

Mr. KEIFER. It is still in opposition to what I understand was the unanimous vote of the Committee on Appropriations, and also of the subcommittee that reported the bill to the full committee. I intend to treat it in that way.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say further that I assume entire responsibility for the amend-

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Michigan assumes the responsibility, but we understand that he has changed his views on this subject.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the amendment?

Mr. KEIFER. The substitute is to abolish all of the agencies for the payment of the pensioners in the United States except one, and have that pension office in the city of Washington.
Mr. DALZELL. There is no such proposition that it shall be in the city of Washington. It is to abolish all but one, and that may be located anywhere.

Mr. KEIFER. It will be located in Washington. I have heard the Commissioner of Pensions talk on that subject, I have heard his testimony. Now, I do not believe that we are going to run off to an extreme when we are trying to do a good thing in a certain direction. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell], whose amendment is pending, says that he does not want to interfere with the Executive power, if such power exists, to abolish some of these agencies; that he does not want to do it, and that he does not want Congress to interfere. Pray, Mr. Chairman, where did the President get his power to establish such agencies save from the Congress of the United States, and shall we not make appropriations, such as are proposed here, to indicate to him the wish of Congress of how he should exercise the powers given him by Congress, and in this way reduce the number of these agencies?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States did not get the power from Congress indirectly, left-handedly, on an appropriation bill, but by a law, and if Congress proposes now to exercise the power, if they want to change this system, they ought to exercise it in a manly way, by a law, and not on an appropriation bill in violation of the rules.

Mr. KEIFER. One thing is certain, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands that if this appropriation bill goes through as it is now it makes a direct and not a left-handed application of the power of Congress, which requires the President to reduce the number of agencies from eighteen to nine.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I deny that.
Mr. KEIFER. Now, another thing I want to say. My distinguished and esteemed friend from Vermont [Mr. Powers] gives a great many reasons apparently for wanting to stand by the eighteen, and appeals to the House and to the country to have the agents handy to the pensioners. He forgets that we have now, and have had for a long time, but one agent for the larger half of the States of this Union; and when we are through, if this bill passes in its present form and the agencies should be reduced to nine, that agency is still to have the duty imposed upon it, to wit, San Francisco, of paying pensioners of California, of Idaho, of Montana, of Nevada, of Oregon, of Utah, of Washington, of Wyoming-a pretty large country for fellows to run in to the pension agencies and get their pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I stated some pretty large States that are to be paid from one agency, and there is nobody here appealing for an agency that shall be handy to the pensioners in these different States. But we are not through with this agency. comes next, and in addition to the States I have just named, that are to be paid at the San Francisco agency? Wyoming I have named. Next comes Alaska, Arizona, Hawaii, Guam, Samoan Islands, and the Philippine Islands—all paid at this one agency at San Francisco, and in case of the consolidation that should be made on the suggestion that is made by the Commissioner of Pensions this agency is to stand, and to-day all those Western States and Western Territories are there to be The number of pensioners that would be then paid at that agency would be, as it is now, 42,514. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Calderhead] speaks for Topeka. He is in no danger. Topeka pays now 113,597 pensioners.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Gardner] be adopted, Topeka would be in danger.

Mr. KEIFER. Of course. I am speaking now of the bill. Philadelphia and Pittsburg, if combined, would pay 105,182 pensioners, not so many as are paid at the single agency at Topeka.

The combined agency of the city of New York and the city of Buffalo would pay 101,500 pensioners; still not up to Topeka at present. There are no complaints out there. The agency in my own State, at Columbus, is paying satisfactorily 98,068 pensioners at the present time under the present system. But let us go to the eastern agencies. Boston pays 59,973; Augusta, Me., 17,723, and Concord, N. H., pays 16,533 pensioners, an aggregate, if they were put together, of 94,229, some 4,000 less than are now paid in Columbus, Ohio, and much less than at the Topeka agency. So that we are not dealing with the question of distance, we are dealing with the question of plain, straightforward business economy. One of the troubles that a Government like ours has is to reduce and cut down. I have not much reputation here for economy on this floor. I am in favor of paying the pensioners well when they deserve it, and wherever we can, without sacrificing any of the interests of the pensioners, we should reduce the expense, and if we are going to apply it anywhere give it to the worthy cause of the soldiers and the sailors or their widows and orphans.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on the pending amendments close in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that debate close in ten minutes. The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the way in which error persists is singularly demonstrated in the debate this morning. We had some debate yesterday upon this proposition, and it we had some debate yesterday upon this proposition, and it has continued to-day, in which the opponents of this consolida-tion have declared that the old soldier would suffer inconven-ience, and notwithstanding the fact that they have been as-sured by the Members who heard the testimony of the Pension Commissioner that the soldiers would suffer no inconvenience, they cling to this threadbare argument to-day for the purpose of sustaining their opposition. I think nothing is plainer than that the old soldier will suffer no delay-at all events, no delay beyond the first payment-

Will the gentleman allow an interruption Mr. DALZELL.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.
Mr. DALZELL. I want to call his attention to this fact: The law under which the pension agencies were established provides that the President shall take into consideration the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners. Now, twenty-one years ago the President of the United States decided that the public interests and the convenience of the pen-sioners required the establishment of eighteen pension agencies. Now, notwithstanding what you gentlemen may say on the floor with respect to the convenience of the pensioners, I see no evidence of any change in conditions since the President exercised his judgment in the first instance and since the various Presidents since that time have continued and confirmed that judgment.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, probably upon no question except one involving the surrender of patronage would we find a high Republican official so universally discredited by Republican Members of Congress as we find here to-day. The statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania means, if it means anything, that the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions, who was appointed by a Republican President to safeguard public interests and convenience, if you please, is of no value whatever. Although the official in charge of the Bureau says that public interests and convenience will not suffer by the consolidation, the gentleman from Pennsylvania totally excludes that testimony. Of course the fact that the agency at Pitts-burg may be removed does not weigh upon the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I am certain there must be some other reason which he has not disclosed. Perhaps it is because he is afraid of lawsuits. He has stated, but without giving any other authority than his own statement, that a civil employee of the Government whose salary can not be paid because of the lack of appropriation may get a judgment against this Government in the Court of Claims. I am not ready to debate that proposition with the gentleman, but I wish he had been more explicit and had furnished us a citation of authority; but even if he had I think it would be a conclusive answer that Congress, which dropped the appropriation on the ground that it was good policy to do so, would refuse to appropriate the money for the payment of the award by the Court of Claims for the very same reason that it abolished the appropriation. Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts permit a question?

Mr. SULLIVAN. Yes.
Mr. POWERS. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to contend that with this transfer 235 clerks can do all

Mr. SULLIVAN. I have not made that contention. Mr. POWERS. Was not that the contention of the chairman of your committee?

I believe he stated that, and I have no Mr. SULLIVAN.

doubt he is right.

Mr. POWERS. Does the gentleman understand that there are 4,000,000 vouchers to be paid, 4,000,000 checks to be sent, 4,000,000 envelopes to be directed, and what does he think of 235 clerks doing that?

Mr. SULLIVAN. If I could finance the proposition, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to organize a corporation to perform this service for one-fourth of the amount which the Government pays, and then I think I would gain $50,000 a year. The service performed is a very slight one, and the suffering, the inconvenience, the hardship, the deprivation mentioned by the gentleman from Maine, who says the decrepit old soldier will be cut off from his privilege of walking all the way down from Aroostook County, in the wilds of Maine, to the city of Augusta to receive the check in person, of course furnishes some reason for his opposition, but I do not think it is a very formidable objection.

Mr. POWERS. May I ask the gentleman another question? While he refers to the disinterestedness of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on account of the agency at Pittsburg, I apprehend the fact that the agency in Boston is to have all the surrounding ones consolidated and paid there has no influence upon the vote of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Not the slightest, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. POWERS. I assumed so.
Mr. SULLIVAN. Not the slightest, as my vote will demonstrate, if the gentleman will observe, because I propose to vote for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], which will put all agencies into one at Washington, and thereby eliminate the Boston agency.

Mr. POWERS. Does not the gentleman know that there is not the slightest chance for that to pass this committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like five minutes, Mr. Chairman, in which to close

Mr. SULLIVAN. I submit to the gentleman that all debate on this proposition this morning has been upon that side. are entitled to ten minutes on this side. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] having his time extended for five minutes?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I hope the gentleman's request, Mr Chairman-

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will present it.

Mr. HULL. I understand the Committee of the Whole has voted to close debate in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct, and there are five minutes remaining.

Can this be extended by unanimous consent? Mr. HULL. The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Five minutes remaining?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended ten minutes above the time

Several Members. Five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the debate be extended ten minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have ten minutes of that time.

Mr. POWERS. The other five minutes to be occupied by persons opposed to the provisions of the bill. Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is that the time be extended ten minutes—that is, ten minutes from now. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky James | asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Sullivan] be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLIVAN. The disturbance, Mr. Chairman, at this proposition to reduce expenditure by reducing patronage could not have been greater if there had been an earthquake upon that side of the Chamber this morning. We find old friends We find old glaring at one another in a very savage manner. friendships being broken and gentlemen appearing hostile who have formerly been upon the best of terms.

Some men say that they oppose this consolidation because we are not doing it in a manly way. They want it done in a manly way—that is to say, in an impossible way—by having the proposition submitted to a committee which will never report This way they oppose because it is the only effective way, as the gentlemen know very well.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull], where there has been a slight tremor, there being an agency at Des Moines, rises and opposes the consolidation upon the ground that we are legislating upon an appropriation bill. I was touched very deeply by that objection of the gentleman from Iowa, as I have had the pleasure to sit here while the bills carrying military appropriations have gone through year after year loaded down with legislation, and it comes with good grace

Mr. HULL. It was also good, as the gentleman indorsed it. Mr. SULLIVAN. It comes with good grace from the gentleman from Iowa to put his objection upon that ground. We find even that some gentlemen in their disinterestedness are in favor of reducing to nine, but not to one. My esteemed colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer]; stands with the committee on the proposition to reduce to nine, and under that proposition the agency at Columbus would stand also. But he objects with great vigor and undoubtedly with great reason to the reduction to one, which one would be located in the city of Washington. He does not believe that economy, like charity, should begin at home.

The earthquake has spread to the State of Wisconsin, and Milwaukee has arisen upon the floor here. And so it goes. And there is Topeka. I was glad to see that Topeka has some virtue left. Topeka is against both propositions upon the ground that we ought to keep these clerks away from the city of Washington, where they suffer from the climate and are not able to work well. They would be healthier and would work much better in the free air of the State of Kansas.

Now, gentlemen, there never was a simpler proposition put before this House. Something like a quarter of a million dollars could be saved if the gentlemen would only disregard the slight inconvenience of dismantling the political organizations which are created by the existence of these agencies in their districts.

If they forget for a while and consider the needs of the Treasury of the United States, we can save a quarter of a million dollars a year. I see no reason, if we look at it from the standpoint of principle, why we should not do so; but we shall undoubtedly see new reasons disclosed in the votes upon this proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy the time of the committee not more than two or three minutes. Since yesterday I am semiofficially advised that space can be arranged in the Pension building at Washington, if the amendment offered by myself should pass, to take care of the entire force for paying pensions. Again, the gentleman from Massachusetts just stated, and others have stated, that a couple of hundred thousand dollars a year would be saved. I think the saving will be more than has been estimated. There will be no inconvenience to the soldier after he has had the first quarter's

I am in sympathy with the pension agents who may, by this proposed legislation, lose the important and lucrative positions which they now hold. Nor do I feel like criticising my friend Mr. Hull, of Iowa, nor my friend Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, who would retain the entire number, nor my honored colleague on the committee, General Keifer, of Ohio, who would dispense with nine and by so doing retain, probably, the agency at Columbus.

Only this morning I received an urgent appeal from the incumbent of the Detroit agency. We were young men together in college and members of the same college fraternity. For forty years we have been warm personal friends. For many years he has been, as he is now, an honored and influential citizen of the district I have the honor to represent. In one of the great battles of the war his arm was shattered by a rifle ball, and he came home with an empty sleeve. In his letter he appeals to withhold the consolidation for his sake. Two of his sons are in school, and he fears they may be deprived of the education he This letter, coming at this time, has planned they should have. strikes a responsive chord in my heart, and yet, gentlemen, ought we to yield to local or State or personal interest, or even motives of friendship, when we are called upon in the discharge of our public duties to legislate what we believe to be for the welfare of the whole country? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the chairman of the subcommittee to state that he had discovered that there was sufficient space in the Pension building to house the clerks?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am semiofficially advised that space can be arranged for them.

Mr. MADDEN. The chairman will remember that I suggested that we could find space, and I was then informed that there was no space.

Mr. KEIFER. And by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. On the authority of the Commissioner of Pensions; but my authority is indirectly from him in the statement I have made.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman will remember that I moved to strike out the whole eighteen agencies and was overruled by the committee. I am glad that they have come to my way of thinking

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The amendment is purely in the interest of economy, without any prejudice to the soldier. If I felt that it would be injurious to my comrades, I would not stand here and advocate a proposition of this kind. I do do not believe that at all, and I hope the amendment offered by myself will prevail. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 22 and 23 so that they will read:
- "For salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000."

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just been read, and we are to vote upon that proposition singly?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TAWNEY. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania increasing the number provided for in the bill from nine to eighteen will be first voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is voted up or voted down, then the gentleman from Michigan can offer his proposed substitute for the provision as amended or inserted, a provision for one agency here at Washington at $4,000?

Mr. MANN. After the original paragraph is perfected.
Mr. TAWNEY. After the original paragraph is perfected or not perfected by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dalzell]. Then the gentleman from Michigan can offer an amendment providing that there be just one agency at $4,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsyl-

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes semed to have it.

Mr. DALZELL. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 114.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as fellows:

Substitute for lines 22 and 23 the following: "For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I believe debate has not been closed on this.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I move to strike out lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 of page 4. This paragraph provides for the inspection of pension agencies, $1,500. There will be no need of any inspection of pension agencies if our action of this morning becomes a law.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the agency here in Washington will be so perfect that there will be no need of an inspection of it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. These agencies are now inspected under the authority of the Pension Commissioner. If the agency is located in the building here in Washington, it certainly can be looked after without any special person being authorized to make the inspection at an additional expense, such as is now carried for that purpose.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Without any extra expense anyway.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House favorably, with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Townsend, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24640, the pension appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Gardner of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INSURANCE LAW FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying report and papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatices:

I transmit herewith a report and subsequent letter from the superintendent of the department of insurance of the District of Columbia, and a letter of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, of Boston, in reference thereto. I agree with the recommendation of Mr. Drake that what is needed is an insurance law for the District of Columbia on the lines of the so-called "Ames bill." already introduced in the House of Representatives, revising so as to include in it all the desirable features of the so-called "uniform bill." With proper modifications, after expert revision, this bill could be enacted into a law so comprehensive and just that it would stand as a model of equity. I regret greatly that there is not national power to deal with this subject; but inasmuch as this seems at present to be the case, we should at least establish a model law in the District of Columbia.

I feel that the department of insurance of the District of Columbia

I feel that the department of insurance of the District of Columbia should be made a bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I am called upon to perform a sad duty on behalf of my colleagues from Michigan and myself, in announcing to the country the death of Hon. Russell A. ALGER, Senator from Michigan.

This announcement comes at a time of peculiar fitness, at an hour when this House has been engaged in the consideration of a bill granting pensions to those who have served their country as soldiers and sailors of this Republic and to their widows and orphans. The distinguished Senator who has passed out of service in the Senate this day spent the years of his early manhood in adding luster to the name of the American volunteer soldier in sixty-six battles and skirmishes. He was commissioned captain of volunteers in August, 1861, major in 1862, lieutenant-colonel in 1863, brevet brigadier-general of volunteers for distinguished service in the field in 1864, brevet major-general of volunteers for distinguished bravery on the field in 1865, commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic in 1889. He was elected governor of the State of Michigan in 1884, appointed Secretary of War by President McKinley in 1897, and chosen to represent the great State of Michigan in the United States Senate in 1902. He has enjoyed many honors bestowed by the admiring citzens of his State, but in the discharge of every public position he has earned the universal credit of duty well done. At some future time I shall ask the House to set aside a day to present proper eulogies on his life, character, and public service.

For the present I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. Russell A. Alger, a Senator of the United States from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That a committee of twelve Members be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, the House do now adjourn.

adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to all the resolutions except the last.

The resolutions, except the last one, were unanimously agreed to.

In pursuance of the foregoing resolutions, the Speaker announced the following committee on the part of the House: Mr. R. P. BISHOP, Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH, Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, Mr. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND, Mr. EDWIN DENBY, Mr. WASHING-TON GARDNER, Mr. H. R. BURTON, Mr. M. L. SMYSER, Mr. J. A. GOULDEN, Mr. JOHN H. SMALL, Mr. DAVID A. DE ARMOND, and Mr. A. P. Pujo.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the last resolution.

The question was taken; and the last resolution was agreed to. Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

Henson, guardian of Mrs. Catherine Gilson (insane) and administrator of estate of Samuel L. Gilson, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Resolution No. 231.

Whereas the following order and regulations are now in force, forbidding lobbying or attempts on the part of officers or employees in the executive branches of the Government to importune Congress or to attempt to influence its action, to wit:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1902.

WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1991.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay, or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the Departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service, Theodore Roosevelt.

REGULATIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY OF THE UNITED

REGULATIONS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE NAVY OF THE UNITED STATES.

ART. 231. Combinations of officers for the purpose of influencing legislation, remonstrating against orders, or complaining of details of duty are forbidden; and no person shall delay obedience to an order for the purpose of making remonstrance or complaint.

ART. 232. All petitions, remonstrances, memorials, and communications from any officer or officers of the Navy or Marine Corps, whether on the active or retired list, addressed to Congress, or to either House thereof, or to any committee of Congress, on any subject of legislation relating to the Navy, pending, proposed, or suggested, shall be forwarded through the Navy Department, and not otherwise, except by authority of the Department. And

Whereas Senators and Representatives in Congress have lately and are now being importuned in order to influence legislation, in accordance with the following memorandum, which is being sent especially to officers and employees in the Navy Department, as follows:

"This is the short session of Congress, and with the exception of the appropriation bills none will receive consideration that do not command the interest and support of a large proportion of the Senators and Representatives. This bill has an excellent chance of being enacted into law at this session if each officer and midshipman will promptly and effectively do his part toward obtaining the interest and support necessary to success. Each officer and midshipman knowing that the bill, if enacted into law, would tremendously add to the efficiency of the personnel, should immediately write or telegraph the Senators and Congressmen representing his State and district, giving his own reasons in his own way for urging them to consider and act on the bill at this session of Congress. Each one should also write influential friends at home and urge them to write or telegraph the Senators and Congressmen to act at this session on the Navy personnel bill transmitted to Congress in a special message by th

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have not been neglected in the matter of importunities from various officers in connection with the so-called "personnel bill," which has been urged upon Congress for favorable consideration at the present session.

I want to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, if it is not a fact that all such importunities are calculated to delay or defeat legislation rather than to advance it?

Mr. HALE. Yes. I think, Mr. President, that Senators and Representatives, as soon as they learn that there is an organized effort to influence legislation in a particular direction, are rather naturally prejudiced against it instead of being impressed in its favor.

I should not have introduced the resolution had I not found myself beset by letters from all parts of the country in relation to the personnel bill. It is an important bill, which has been carefully considered, and should not be the subject of pressure I had this morning a letter from somebody not in any way connected with the Navy, written from Philadelphia—some officer had probably written to him—who wants the bill passed at once, without delay. I was rather amused at the final suggestion of the letter:

For the dignity of our country it is also very important that Congress shall establish the grade of Vice-Admiral and authorize at least three officers of this grade.

I have no idea that the man who writes this letter from Philadelphia knows anything about that matter. The Military Committee has recently reported in favor of abolishing the grade of Lieutenant-General, and yet this personnel bill, which certain line officers are endeavoring to crowd through Congress, provides for three new Vice-Admirals, and in five years there would be twelve or fifteen active and retired Vice-Admirals.

I think the committees in charge of this matter are fully competent to deal with it. The programme that I have embodied in my resolution is found in the Army and Navy Register of January 15, 1907, where it is referred to as an existing fact.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the older officers of the line of the Navy have gone into this business very much, if at all; I think it is the younger and more ambitious men who have an idea that they can influence legislation in this way. This is best described by what one of them says, that the line officers were going to light a fire under every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives and oblige them to report this bill.

I do not want to discuss the bill. I do not know that the Secretary is aware of what is going on in contravention of the orders of the Department and of the express and complete and drastic order of the President. I fancy he does not know of it. He is a man of good administrative faculties who has had service in Congress, and I presume as soon as this condition is brought to his attention—and that is my object in presenting the resolution—he will put a stop to it, and that we shall be freed from the importunities of certain line officers, who propose, as is stated here, to extend this even to the cadets, the midshipmen at Annapolis, who are asked to write to all their Senators and Representatives, and to their friends throughout the country.

It is not the business, Mr. President, of the Executive Departments; it is the business of Congress to legislate. I have offered the resolution because I want the Secretary of the Navy to know what is going on, and I presume as soon as he learns what is going on in his Department we shall have no more of this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been greatly interested in the statement made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I join with him in the expression of the hope that the passage of this resolution will put a stop to the grievance of which he complains.

At the same time, Mr. President, I will venture to say that, in my judgment, there are incongruities and there is some degree of injustice in the existing personnel law, and I expect that the committee of which the Senator from Maine is chairman will in due time, at the proper time, take the matter up and examine the question anew, and, if it is thought wise, recommend further legislation in reference thereto.

I simply want to express the hope that we may be relieved by the passage of this resolution of what has become to some of us a considerable burden. I presume I have answered twenty letters recently on that very subject, and many of them have come, as the one to which the Senator from Maine has alluded, from parties outside, not in any way connected with the Navy, indicating that they have been importuned to write such letters.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not wish to take issue with the learned Senators as to the particular bill which they have brought to the attention of the Senate by way of illustration of the alleged evil of which they complain and which this resolution is designed to correct. What, therefore, I shall say will have no special reference to that particular bill.

I do not, however, personally favor the passage of this resolution, because in so doing there would be an indorsement of the President's order which is quoted therein. It is not a simple matter of the convenience or inconvenience of Senators. Of course I recognize the inconvenience of importunities by those desiring legislation on different subjects, and I presume I have to bear my share of that inconvenience. But I have never thought that the President of the United States was justified in issuing orders prohibiting officers and men of the Army, and more particularly—even if there should be any peculiar reasons in regard to the Army and the Navy—more particularly as to civil officers of the Government, those in the Executive Departments, from bringing to the attention of Congress legislation which they thought was important for themselves or for the particular orders or classes to which they belong.

I regard the right of petition, Mr. President, as a fundamental right. It is a right which extends to every individual under the Government, high or low, military or civil, either in official or private life, and not excluding anyone bearing the relation of an employee to the Government.

It has been a long time since the right of petition has been one of serious debate in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HALE. Did the Senator note the language of the resolution and the citations which I have made? They are all in the direction of encouraging the right of petition and of presenting grievances and presenting suggestions for legislation in the form of petition. That is a right with which we never want to interfere. But for an association to combine, as stated in this paper, for the purpose of influencing Senators and Representatives by private correspondence and other ways is taking them away from their duties and is not the right of petition. It is in the interest of all these things coming to Congress by petition and being referred to the proper committees that the resolution is proposed. That is one of the things the resolution seeks to accomplish.

Mr. BACON. I do not regard the right of petition as being so limited as would be suggested by the remarks of the learned Senator from Maine. I regard the right of petition as one very broad and comprehensive in its character. It means the right of every individual to bring to the attention of Congress, in any manner he may see proper, not necessarily through the medium of a formal petition, beginning and ending with the formalities of such documents, but the right of any man, in any manner that he may see proper, to bring to the attention of Congress collectively, or to any Member of Congress, any matter that he thinks is one deserving the attention of Congress, one which in any manner affects his interest.

Mr. President, the enactment of law or the repeal of law are questions which in their practical operation do relate to the interest of the citizen, and because a man is a clerk in a Department or an officer of the Army or an officer of the Navy does not, in my opinion, deprive him of the great fundamental constitutional right which he has to appeal to Congress. I have never thought that the executive department, the head of it or any subordinate branch of it, had any right to step between the citizen and Congress and say that that citizen should not have direct communication by petition or remonstrance with Congress. While it is true that the language of the Constitution is that While it is true that the language of the Constitution is that guaranteeing to the people the right to assemble and petition Congress, the spirit of the Constitution does not necessarily limit it to assemblages. It involves the larger, broader right to which I have alluded—the right of every man to bring his matters to the attention of Congress in order that Congress may legislate with information and knowledge of the desires which may be given and expressed by that individual, or by any association of individuals or by any committee of such associations, either to enlarge or protect his rights and privileges or to redress his grievances.

Why is it, how is it, and whence is it, that the President of the United States has such dictatorial power that he may practically say to Congress, "You shall not hear from the citizen?" When the President of the United States says to a clerk in a Department, "You shall not speak to a Senator with regard to your matter; you shall not communicate with him as to any matter of legislation"—because that is the language of the order—it is practically saying to Congress, "You shall not hear from the citizen." It is not simply a restriction on the individual. It is an attempt, not so designed, doubtless, but practically, to curtail the power of Congress to hear from the individual as to what is to the interest of the individual, and as to the interest of each individual, in the aggregation of all the individuals of the country at large.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have just had my attention called to the Senator's speech, and I was wondering whether this was a supplement to the speech which I listened to two or three days ago on the powers of the President. The Senator seems to have made some change in his views recently upon the powers of the President.

Mr. BACON. I think not. I suppose the Senator alludes to the fact that I advocated upon this floor the right of the President to summarily discharge soldiers from the Army whenever the good of the service required it, and especially whenever the public safety required it. That rests upon an entirely different proposition. I can not resume that argument and repeat it. thought, from the vote of the Senator, that he had recognized that right on the part of the President, especially since the Senator is one of the principal spokesmen of the President on the floor of the Senate. I did not know that he had taken the position that the President did not have the power. If the Senator from Rhode Island in that discussion occupied a position hostile to the President, he did not so announce on the floor of the Senate. I imagine now, though, that he simply concealed the fact that he was not in exactly friendly relationship to the President on that particular matter.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. Am I misrepresenting the Senator?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say my only anxiety to-day was caused by the fear that the Senator from Georgia had deserted his former position.

Mr. BACON. No, sir. Even in that debate, when I was contending for the right of the President, not under his constitutional, indefeasible power, but under the laws of the land as they have been enacted by Congress, the Senator will remember the colloquy and the discussion between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] and myself as to the exercise of one-man power and as to the great importance of the ultimate power being in Congress and not in any one man.

Mr. President, so far from what the Senator from Rhode Island says being true, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] twitted me in that debate with the fact that not only once, but many times he had heard me advocate upon the floor of the Senate that the ultimate power, generally speaking, is with Congress and not with the President. But, Mr. President, I suppose the remark was a pleasantry on the part of the Senator from Rhode Island. He simply desired to take this indirect way of having the announcement now made, after that dis-cussion is over and the vote upon the measure taken, that he was not in friendly accord with the President upon the matter which we have been discussing for so long. I had supposed the Senator was on the other side; and, of course, I am glad if I have given him the opportunity to set himself right before the country, so that we now know where he then stood, although he did not inform us of it at the time. It will doubtless be a distinct shock to the country to know that the Senator from Rhode Island, the political leader of his party in the Senate, is not in all things in accord with the President.

Mr. President, I do not think it becomes us to take the attitude that, because of inconvenience or even of annoyance caused to us by the importunities of parties who may be interested in legislation pending or desired, therefore we are to endeavor to shelter ourselves behind an Executive order, because I regard these Executive orders, so far as I am able to judge of themand I say it with the utmost respect—as improper, in that they are an invasion of the constitutional right of the citizen. regard them as an invasion of the great fundamental right of petition.

As I was saying when I was interrupted, it has been a long time since the question of the right of petition has been a press-ing matter of debate in Congress. Time was when it was, and all of us who are more or less familiar with the political history of the country will remember the great record made by that great and distinguished son of New England, John Quincy Adams, in defense of the right of petition. Mr. President, it is well that once in a while we should recur to the question of the importance of that right. While I have not thought that we could in a practical way interfere with these orders issued by the President, I have, I repeat, always thought they were improper orders.

Mr. President, we stand in a very peculiar relation—we who are here and who are complaining of the inconvenience and burden by reason of the fact that others who have interest in the legislation of Congress take up our time in bringing to our consideration their particular needs and wants.

When we ourselves have needs and wants we have only to When we ourselves have needs and wants we have only to burden anybody else. We act upon them. We do not have to burden anybody else. have recently acted upon what was considered to be a great need and a great want of Senators and Representatives, in the increase of salary. Shall it be that while we can act upon these matters which relate to our own interests, other employees of the Government or other officers of the Government, if you please, shall be denied the right even to bring to our attention things which concern them, and which relate to their interests and to their comfort and to their necessities as greatly as these other matters related to those of our own?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT, Does the Senator from Georgia
yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Georgia if he claims that the order he refers to contravenes any section of the Constitution?

Mr. BACON. I say it contravenes the spirit of the Constitution, not the letter of it. I have said that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Constitution provides, if I may take the time of the Senator, that Congress shall pass no law prohibiting the right of petition. It does not prevent the President from making such rules and regulations as he may see for the government of the employees of the Executive Depart. for the government of the employees of the Executive Departments. The constitutional provision prohibits Congress from passing a law denying the right of petition.

Mr. BACON. What is the section to which the Senator refers? Give me the page?

Mr. McCUMBER. The first amendment.

The first amendment. Mr. LODGE.

Mr. McCUMBER. It provides:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof—

Mr. BACON. I have already quoted that article.

Mr. McCUMBER (continuing)- or abridging the right of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

I can not see that that would be in conflict with the right of the Executive authority to say to the employees of the Government that they shall not organize a conspiracy for the purpose of compelling Members of Congress to vote one way or the other upon any given subject.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator uses an improper word when he speaks about organizing a conspiracy. Of course "conspiro" means to breathe together.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say combining together.
Mr. BACON. Anything which is a concert of action, or an agreement of concert of action, is, according to the Latin derivation of the word, a conspiracy. But we all know what the general understanding of the word conspiracy is. It does not relate to anything of this kind.

But passing that, and going to the essential feature of the matter, I do not at all agree with my learned and distinguished friend as to the proper construction of this section of the Con-I want to say to him in all candor that with the highest estimate which I have for his ability as a lawyer I am utterly surprised that he should suggest that the intention of this amendment is to prohibit Congress from denying to parties the right to appeal to Congress, and at the same time to permit the Executive to erect a barrier between any part of the people and Congress

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not saying, if the Senator will permit me, what the law ought to be.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of what it is.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking of what the constitutional provision is.

Mr. BACON.

Mr. McCUMBER. And I believe the Senator as a splendid lawyer would not contend that this provision in the Constitution meant anything other than a prohibition against Congress enacting such a law.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had previously called attention to the fact that the matter for which I was contending was not within the letter of the Constitution, but with its spirit and evident intent, and I had quoted the language of the Constitution, which the Senator has since quoted, remarking that it was simply a prohibition against any prevention of the people assembling to petition Congress. But I had said that the spirit of the Constitution, the intention of the Constitution, was that there should be no barrier erected between the people and Congress, and no interference with their right to bring to the attention of Congress any matter which was thought to be important for the interests or the rights of the people or for their protection. The manifest intention of this amendment to the Constitution was to protect as inviolate the right of peti-When the prohibition against the invasion of such right was limited to Congress it was manifestly because there was no thought that the right to invade it would ever be claimed by the executive department or any officer thereof. So far as laws are concerned the great duty of the President is limited to the command, "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

I scarcely know how to elaborate the proposition, even if it were advisable that I should consume time in an attempt to do so. It seems to me the plain and manifest intention of the Constitution to give free access to Congress and to Members of Congress on the part of all the people, to bring to their attention anything which they may think important that those charged with the high duty of making the law should know. These arbitrary orders of the President of the United States do not sound right at all in my ear. They have too much the sound to my ear of autocratic and unrestrained rule. They have too much the sound to my ear, on the other hand, of the assumption of the condition of underlings who can be ordered to be silent in matters which relate to things which concern them, and about which they ought, as freemen, have the right to talk, not only to the public, but to their representatives in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

I do not like the sound of this order at all. It does not sound like the twentieth century to me. I will read it here again in this connection:

All officers and employees of the United States, of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments—

That means over a hundred thousand men-I suspect nearer 200,000 men-in the United States and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden-

That is the language of the master to the servant-are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees or in any way save through the heads of the Departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

Mr. President, no master could issue any more peremptory or drastic order than that. That order, peremptory as it is, drastic as it is, invasive, as I believe it to be, of a fundamental right of every citizen of the United States, will reach possibly 200,000 men throughout the United States. Of course Senators may do as they see fit. I am simply expressing my own individual view about this matter. It has always grated on my ear, and while I never had the expectation of saying anything about it in the Senate, as the Senator from Maine has brought the matter here and has had this order recited in the proposed resolution, I am glad of the opportunity to enter my protest against It as an invasion of the fundamental rights of every man who has the rights of citizenship, and the right to enjoy the benefit and privileges of law under the Constitution of the United States Mr. President, here we have within the past few days, after consideration for the whole session, originated first in one House, failing to be acted upon there, and going back, and then returning to us again, after having been acted upon there, and then finally acted upon here, passed upon the question of our compensation. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] says, sotto voce, that I voted against it. That is a fact, but it does not interfere in the slightest degree with the correctness of my present contention. We have had brought to our attention, through the public press and through other sources, the fact that the scale of compensation of employees in the service of the Government in Washington makes it extremely difficult for them to live in the way in which they are entitled to live. Now, that may be true or it may not be true, but I am strongly of the opinion that it is true. But under this order these 200,000 people, not only those in Washington, but those out of Washington, are prohibited from bringing to the attention of Congress the question whether or not they should have increased compensation just as we have voted to ourselves increased compensation. I do not know what would be the determination of Congress if this matter was brought up for its consideration and for a vote upon it, but I say it is a fundamental right of those people to go to a Representative or Senator and lay the matter before such Representative or such Senator in order that it may have proper consideration at the hands of Congress. It is not right, it is not fair, it is not in accord with equal rights under the law to say that they shall only communicate with their Senators and Representatives through the heads of Departments relative to such matters so vitally affecting their personal interests

Mr. President, I am glad of the opportunity which has been thus unexpectedly presented to express my opinion in regard to the propriety and the constitutionality of these orders. I think the resolution had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BACON. I said I thought it had better go over.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the resolution will lie over.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveridge] gave notice that on Monday next he would resume his speech on the question of child labor. He had conferred with me, I having given notice that I would call up an important bill on that day, and I was glad to accommodate him in that respect.

ble to do so, after the Senator from Indiana concludes his remarks, or, if not, after the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] concludes the remarks of which he has given notice for Tuesday, provided there be no appropriation bill under consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to suggest in connection with the statement just made that when the resolution to which the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] has given notice he will speak is before the Senate, I sincerely hope it will remain there until the question involved, which is the question of the public lands of the United States and certain orders which have been issued suspending entry and patent, are thoroughly discussed and disposed of.

I desire at this time to give notice that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Montana upon that resolution, if no other business having the right of way is before the Senate, I will supplement those remarks with some others on my own part. Mr. GALLINGER. In response to that statement, Mr. President, I desire to say that while I personally am always anxious to accommodate Senators in matters of this kind, I must insist that a bill providing for the extension of the lines of the street railways to the Union Station is of really more consequence than a speech. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not interfere with the consideration of that bill, but will reserve his speech on this resolution until after that bill has been considered on Tuesday.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was not my intention to be understood as intending to antagonize the measure referred to, but only to suggest a continuous discussion of the public lands question until some fruitful result is obtained. It will be easy enough, after that question is brought before the Senate by the Senator from Montana, to waive its consideration long enough to enable the measure suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire to be considered.

I desire to make a suggestion in connection with this matter. The subject involved in the resolution of the Senator from Montana, coupled with the President's message to us to which it is really directed, now upon the table, involves questions than which there are no more important before the Senate. message referred to has suspended the issuance of patents upon more than 53,000 applications before the Department and has tied up in the recorder's office of the Government patents which have been approved, formulated, ready for signature and delivery to the number of more than 5,000. I can not imagine a more important matter, and it is only because of these extraordinary conditions that I have given notice. I hope the Senate may be willing to take up the consideration of the President's message in regard to the public lands immediately in connection with the resolution of the Senator from Montana,

MEMORIAL SERVICES ON THE LATE SENATOR GORMAN.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on next Friday, February 1, at half past 2 o'clock, I will submit resolutions commemorative of the public services of the late Senator Gorman. The services were to have taken place tomorrow, but have been unavoidably postponed.

UNIFORM INSURANCE LAW FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Scnate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report and subsequent letter from the superintendent of the department of insurance of the District of Columbia, and a letter of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, of Boston, in reference thereto. I agree with the recommendation of Mr. Drake that what is needed is an insurance law for the District of Columbia on the lines of the so-called "Ames bill," already introduced in the House of Representatives, revising it so as to include in it all the desirable features of the so-called "uniform bill." With proper modifications after expert revision this bill could be enacted into a law so comprehensive and just that it would stand as a model of equity. I regret greatly that there is not national power to deal with this subject; but inasmuch as this seems at present to be the case, we should at least establish a model law in the District of Columbia.

I feel that the department of insurance of the District of Columbia should be made a bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The White House, January 24, 1907.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 24, 1907.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand the message, it relates to a very comprehensive and complicated bill on the matter of insurance.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Where is that bill pending?

Mr. GALLINGER. In the other House at the present time. think

Mr. SPOONER. It has not come here yet?

accommodate him in that respect.

I now desire to say that I will call up that bill, if it be possirose to state is that the Committee on the District of Columbia is greatly overburdened with work, having had during the present Congress between two and three hundred bills before it, and would suggest, or, if necessary, move, that the message be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I hope that will not be done. What is proposed is a bill which relates entirely to the District of Columbia, and so far as appears to the Senate it involves no grave question nor any question of constitutional law. The Committee on the District of Columbia is evidently the proper committee to deal with it. The chairman alone, without any help from the committee, is eminently qualified to examine the bill and discover defects in it and remedy them. I, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Indianay suggestion. sence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, suggest that the message ought to go to the Committee on the Dis trict of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will withdraw my suggestion and will accept the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and printed.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 7709) to revise, codify, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. In view of the fact that there are a number of Senators interested in this measure who are not present today, I will not ask to take it up now, but I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AFFAIRS OF MEXICAN KICKAPOO INDIANS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. Teller on the 16th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

deceased, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SPOONER. A bill identical with that, as I remember it, was reported from the Committee on Finance and passed the Senate. I ask that this House bill be put on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Kempa, executor of the last will and testament of William J. Johnson, which was, in line 4, to strike out all after the word "pay" down to and including "appropriated," in line 5, and to insert "out of the fund standing to the credit of the United States from deposits made by individuals for the survey of public lands."

UNITED STATES COURTS AT CLARKSDALE, MISS.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R.

24285) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Clarksdale, Miss., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Coahoma, Bolivar, Quitman, Tunica, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Leflore shall constitute a part of the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, and shall be known as the Delta division of said district. Circuit and district courts for the transaction of business pertaining to persons or property in said Delta division shall be held at the city of Clarksdale, in Coahoma County, on the third Monday in June and December in each year, and shall continue for twelve days or so long as business may require.

SEC. 2. That said courts to be held at Clarksdale, as provided in section 1 of this act, shall be possessed of and shall exercise all the powers and jurisdiction now possessed or exercised, or which may hereafter be granted to or exercised, by the circuit and district courts in said district now held at Oxford, Miss., and all laws regulating and defining how suits against persons or property located or found in judicial districts shall be brought shall be applicable to and govern the bringing of suits in said Delta division; and all laws touching the removal of causes from the State courts to the United States courts shall apply to said court hereby established; but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within the counties composing said Delta division shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The fee for such transcript sh

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi what the effect of the bill is?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the effect of the bill is to require the present Federal judge to hold court at a different place from the places he now holds court in the two divisions in the State. This bill does not create a new district, but does create a new division. I think there are three divisions in the southern district and two in the northern district, and the counties composing the proposed new division are now remote from court facilities. The fact is, people have to travel from 150 to 200 miles to get to the Federal court. This provides that the present judge shall hold court at Clarksdale, a point that is convenient to the people of the proposed division.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

RESURVEY OF LAND IN FREMONT COUNTY, COLO.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1178) providing for the resurvey of a township of land in Colorado, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be made a resurvey of the lands in township No. 16 south, of range No. 71 west, of the sixth principal meridian, in Fremont County, in the State of Colorado; and all rules and regulations of the Interior Department requiring petitions from all settlers of said township asking for resurvey and agreement to abide by the result of same, so far as these lands are concerned, are hereby abrogated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the present bona fide claim of any actual occupant of any of said lands so occupied: Provided further, That before any survey is ordered it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the former official survey of said lands is so inaccurate or obliterated as to make it necessary to survey the land, and only such parts of the land where the survey is so inaccurate or obliterated shall be surveyed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman to explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. The purpose of the bill is simply to provide for a resurvey of lands in a single township, where the present monuments are so obliterated and destroyed that it is impossible to locate the particular Government subdivisions which are to be entered. The bill is the ordinary bill for resurvey and has the unanimous report from the committee

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is that the same bill that was passed at the last session?

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Oh, no; that bill was for a resurvey of a considerable quantity of land, while this is a bill for a resurvey of a single township of land in Fremont

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Brooks of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does this create a new judge?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; it does create a new judge. Mr. Speaker, at the present time the calendar in the United States circuit court at San Francisco is clogged to such an extent that cases are two years in arrears. The situation there is this: present district court judge for the northern district of California can just about keep up with his calendar. The circuit judge sits practically all the time in the circuit court of appeals, and his circuit court calendar is continually running further That is why the cases are about two years behind in trial in the circuit court. The Department of Justice recom-mends this bill very strongly; the Judiciary Committee has reported it unanimously. The Department of Justice has made a suggestion which this bill endeavors to carry out, that instead of limiting this judge to the northern district he shall be assigned either to the northern or southern district, as the case may be, so in case the district judge of the southern district becomes sick or his calendar becomes clogged the new judge can move down to Los Angeles for a while and try cases there. It is absolutely imperative, the Department says, that some relief should be given at this time. The business of the court relief should be given at this time. The business of the court has been constantly increasing. A large number of cases are constantly being filed. Litigants have no opportunity to have them adjudicated. Judge Morrow of the circuit court is, in addition to that, a sick man. His eyesight is failing, and that makes another hardship; but the entire bench of the circuit court of appeals unite in asking Congress to give this additional judge, so as to relieve the congestion that prevails there.

Mr. MANN. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the other day we passed a bill providing for an additional judge in Ohio only during the life of the present judge. Now, the same condition exists there that exists here. The present judge has not the physical capacity to attend to the work. Oh, I understand the gentleman shakes his head; but 1 believe that to be the fact from my information.

Mr. KAHN. I have not probably made myself clear. is not the fact. The circuit court judge at San Francisco. The circuit court judge at San Francisco sits in the circuit court of appeals as much as he can, in fact nearly all The work of that court is so great that for several the time. years Judge Morrow has been practically unable to do any circuit-court work. The work of the circuit court of appeals is constantly growing in the ninth circuit. It is a very large circuit. It embraces all of those large States along the Pacific coast and many interior States, as well as the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska, and the Philippine Islands. Ordinarily a district judge could be assigned to do the circuit-court work, but the district judge at San Francisco can only attend to his own calendar and can not sit in the circuit court. His own calendar takes up all of his time. If Judge Morrow is to perform his duties in connection with the circuit court of appeals, which, of course, I presume the gentleman from Illinois will recognize as being absolutely necessary, then he can hardly do his circuitcourt work, and the purpose of having this judge appointed is to enable this new district judge practically to do circuit-court

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says the district judge is engaged all the time in doing district court work. If the gentleman is correct, a very peculiar condition of affairs exists there, because there is not another district judge in the United States who is engaged one-third of the time in doing district work. Now, will the gentleman inform us what is the peculiar condition of affairs in California that requires a district judge to be constantly busy in the trial of criminal or libel suits?

Mr. KAHN. He tries not only criminal or libel suits, but also tries civil suits in which one of the parties is not a citizen of the State of California.

Mr. MANN. But in the district courts he does not.

Mr. KAHN. He does in the district courts. He has all the bankruptcy work. There is a great deal of work in that district. The gentleman must know that Chinese cases come in there constantly and take up a great deal of time. The district judge of that district was a former Member of this Congress, and I venture the assertion that there is not a more conscientious judge upon the bench in any State of this Union. I know personally that he is constantly engaged in his own court, because I have occasion to see him frequently.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says, "engaged in his own court." Is it not the universal practice throughout the United States for the district judge to sit as a circuit judge? If this is the case there, the gentleman has not made out a very good case yet, and if it be the fact that the district judge is engaged all the time in attending to district business, I think we ought to know what business he has there that requires so much atto know what business he has there that requires so much attention. It does not require all of the time of the district judge of New York City, nor the district judge in Chicago, where, probably, there are as many criminal cases, or ought to be, as there are in California. He is not required to sit one-half of his time trying district business.

Mr. KAHN. The conditions, then, in Chicago and New York are different from what they are in San Francisco. Mr. MANN. That is what we are trying to ascertain. What are the facts in San Francisco?
